THE ANTI-IMMIGRANT POLICIES AND EXTREMIST MONEY BLOCKING PROGRESS IN THE SENATE

reproductive rights, what ought to be an issue of effective and practical modern public health policy has been reframed by the right as a threat to religious liberty. Despite an exception to the HHS rule allowing religiously affiliated employers to avoid paying premiums that support contraceptives by shifting the responsibility onto insurers, conservatives remain outraged. But the outside groups and politicians who persist in protesting over the issue are at odds with the American public.

The Truth About Tax Cuts For The Rich, Deregulation, And Job Creation

Despite demanding immediate deficit reduction in a difficult economy, conservatives insist that any increase in tax rates for top income earners will kill jobs. Instead, they argue for lowering tax rates on the wealthiest Americans (while downplaying the deficit impact of such a tax cut) as way to increase hiring. There is no evidence for this argument, however intuitive it may seem. Lower tax rates on the rich are not associated with more hiring or stonger GDP growth, and while conservatives insist that top income tax rates hit small businesses heavily, their ludicrous definition of "small business" renders that statement meaningless. Along with the threat of higher taxes, conservatives insist that federal regulations are holding back job creation and have made loosening the rules a focus of their agenda. However, tax breaks for the wealthy and deregulation do almost nothing to increase consumer demand, which is the true driver of hiring and expansion decisions.

Rep. Paul Ryan's Severely Conservative Budget Benefits The Rich At The Expense Of The Vulnerable

07-31-2012

Those familiar with House Budget Committee Chairman Paul Ryan's (R-WI) last budget proposal won't be shocked at this year's updated "Path to Prosperity," a fiscal plan for 2013 and beyond that pledges policy prescriptions for "safeguarding America from the perils of debt, doubt and decline." Like the old version of the "Path," Ryan's second attempt at engineering fiscal policy – including recommendations for overhauling the tax code, cutting spending, and reforming Medicare and Medicaid – takes an axe to federal spending that benefits those without political or economic power but showers tax breaks on the wealthy. With its absence of reasonable solutions for lowering debt and its far-fetched proposals to shift the country's fiscal burdens onto the poor and middle class, the latest Ryan plan is at heart the same as the old one: A blueprint not for stabilizing the country's fiscal situation but for forcing an ultra-conservative vision on the federal government.

Conservative Hostility To Women's Rights Doesn't Stop At Health Care

Amid a decades-long crusade against abortion rights and a more recent uproar over access to contraceptives, conservatives' efforts to intrude upon women's control over their own health care are well publicized. But the GOP of recent years has also demonstrated that women's physical safety, economic security, and equal access to the workforce are increasingly low on the priority list. For the first time since its initial 1994 passage, the GOP has put up a fight against reauthorizing the Violence Against Women Act. Republicans on both the state and national level have sneered at the need for laws that address the fact that women still earn only about 75 percent of what men do for performing the same jobs. Conservatives have rejected legislation to mandate paid parental leave – something every other economically advanced country in the world requires. They are skeptical about allowing women to serve in military combat roles despite an on-the-ground reality that already puts women in dangerous combat situations. And they are dismissive of an Equal Rights Amendment that would afford the same weight to sex-based discrimination that the 14th Amendment currently gives race-based discrimination.

It's Not Just Abortion: The Far-Reaching Conservative War On Women's Health

07-29-2012

Attempts to restrict women's access to legal and safe abortion is only the tip of the iceberg when it comes to the conservative assault on women's health care. Conservatives, particularly the increasingly right-wing House Republicans who rode into the majority on a Tea Party wave, have also sought to undermine and defund a variety of what ought to be non-divisive women's health care services. Over the last year or so, conservatives have ramped up the war on women's health care, including access to contraceptives, preventive services like cancer screenings, and programs that promote maternal and childhood health.

Contraceptive Coverage: No Bitter Pill For Most Americans

The arguments in favor of the new Health and Human Services (HHS) rule requiring employers to provide health plans that cover contraceptives with no cost-sharing are overwhelming. Yet, as is often the case in matters concerning women's health and current benefits – and the controversial GOP plan authored by Rep. Paul Ryan (R-WI) actually retained almost all of the spending reductions in the law. ACA also reduces overpayments to Medicare Advantage, a private alternative to the federally run plan, and creates a Senate-confirmed board of experts to find future savings. Meanwhile, conservative critics fail to mention that ACA closes the prescription drug "donut hole," provides free preventive services to millions of seniors, and extends the program's solvency.

More Bad Medicine For Seniors In Latest Ryan Budget 08-06-2012

House Budget Chairman Paul Ryan (R-WI) is out with an updated version of his fiscal blueprint for the country, replacing last year's widely panned plan to effectively end Medicare by turning it into a voucher system with an only slightly less destructive concoction. In his latest proposal, Ryan pitches a premium-support system that would offer seniors a voucher to buy either traditional Medicare or a private plan, purporting to control costs by allowing competition. But the vouchers wouldn't be able to keep up with rapidly rising medical costs, shifting the burden onto beneficiaries and eventually rendering traditional Medicare an unviable program.

Ryan Medicare Plan Eliminates Health Security For America's Seniors 08-05-2012

In 2011, House Budget Committee Chairman Paul Ryan (R-WI) introduced a controversial plan that he claimed would "save" Medicare. The proposal was included in the House budget, which passed the lower chamber with nearly unanimous support from Republicans but was voted down in the Senate. The Medicare debate rages on, however, and the facts about the Ryan plan are too often obscured by the aggressive spin of its supporters and distracting arguments about the definition of words like "end" and "voucher." Whatever the right wants to call it, the Ryan plan is radical legislation that would hurt millions of Americans who rely on Medicare for health security.

What Americans Lose If Conservatives Get Their Way On The Affordable Care Act 08-04-2012

After several failed attempts to repeal or defund the Affordable Care Act, conservative candidates are persisting in making the destruction of the landmark health care reform law a campaign issue, with many promising to do away with the law come 2013. But the benefits in the law are already kicking in, and repealing the law would affect millions of Americans who are already seeing lower health care costs, better services, and protection against industry abuses.

Private-Sector Recovery Diminished By Shrinking Government Payrolls 08-03-2012

It's unremarkable for President Obama's opponents to deride his career in public service; ever since Ronald Reagan ran into term limits, conservatives have insisted that business experience is more important in the White House than intellect, vision, and policy knowledge. But conservative reverence for the business world and disdain for government work is so dogmatic today that Republicans often claim that Obama's policies have primarily, or even only, benefitted the public sector at the expense of the private economy. This is nonsense. The primary difference between the Obama recovery and the previous three post-recession economies, other than the depth of the crater Wall Street's actions created, is that where government payrolls expanded under Presidents Bush, Clinton, and Reagan, the public sector has shed well over half a million jobs since the end of the recession. Meanwhile, private-sector hiring has been far more consistent than conservatives would have you believe.

Unequal America: The Facts About Income Inequality And Economic Mobility 08-02-2012

The American economic pie may have increased in size, but 95 percent of Americans are getting a smaller slice than in the past. This is partly because the top 1 percent of the country has nearly quadrupled the size of its own helping. Their nearly 300 percent increase in take-home pay over that time dwarfs the more modest progress of the rest. Furthermore, while conservatives allege that progressives seek equal outcomes for all, at the cost of American economic freedom, the fact is our storied "equality of opportunity" is overstated. Economic mobility is scarce in the U.S. compared to other advanced economies, and most born into wealth or poverty stay more or less where they started.

Given that Susan B. ### Barriers To Reform: The Anti-Immigration Policies And Extremist Money Blocking Progress In The Senate

04-15-2013

As immigration reform moves forward in the Senate, the success of any legislation will depend on the cooperation of conservative lawmakers with troubling histories on the issue. However, it is not only their past policy positions and quotes that are disturbing. These key conservative senators also share a history of campaign contributors who also fund extremist anti-immigrant organizations, including those labeled as hate groups by the Southern Poverty Law Center.

Better Off: 2008 Vs. 2012

11-02-2012

Ahead of the 2012 election, the conservative movement has made a concerted effort to undersell the economic recovery. Ads run by conservative outside groups regularly remark on lost jobs and paint a dismal economic picture. Mitt Romney brushed aside a report that over 170,000 new jobs were created in October to proclaim that the economy "is at a virtual standstill." Yet there is widespread evidence against the idea that the economy has stalled or worsened during President Obama's tenure. Where headlines in 2008 and early 2009 proclaimed job losses, a crashing housing market, and a contracting economy, the news in late 2012 is hopeful: 171,000 jobs were added in October, the 32nd straight month of private-sector growth; home prices are up while foreclosures are down; the economy is once again expanding; and consumer confidence is at its highest level since February 2008.

Meet The Man Behind The Claim That Obama 'Gutted' Welfare Reform

09-13-2012

Following a July 2012 Health and Human Services memo offering states a chance to apply for waivers that would allow them more flexibility in complying with welfare's work requirements, conservatives began claiming that President Obama had 'gutted' the 1996 welfare reform law and waived all work requirements associated with receiving assistance. This is false. Currently, activities that fulfill work requirements are narrowly defined by changes made during the law's 2005 reauthorization, and the waivers would let states try out new approaches to moving welfare beneficiaries towards stable employment while maintaining the principle that recipients must be progressing towards work. Yet the allegation remains popular among conservatives, thanks largely to the efforts of the Heritage Foundation's in-house welfare expert, Robert Rector.

How The Affordable Care Act Makes Medicare Stronger

08-07-2012

More than two years after the Affordable Care Act (ACA) was signed into law, the conservative crusade against the bill continues. Perhaps the most common attack against the law is that it hurts America's seniors, specifically by "cutting" or "slashing" $500 billion from Medicare. In reality, ACA's savings do not have a negative impact on wheelhouse, and with Medicare taking up more and more of the national conversation, expect them to keep hinting at the "death panels" characterization of health care reform.

Welcome To Bridge Project: A New Effort To Hold Conservatives Accountable

One billion dollars.

That's how much conservative outside groups are planning to spend in an election-year push "unlike anything seen before in American politics," according to Politico. American Crossroads and Crossroads GPS, the affiliated super PAC and nonprofit hatched by Karl Rove, are expected to spend $300 million on their own. Meanwhile, the billionaire Koch brothers and their fundraising network plan to unload a reported $400 million to further the cause of installing a more conservative government.

The bulk of that cash likely will be spent on advertising, as already evidenced by the barrage of TV spots that conservative outside groups have aired throughout the summer. Those ads – many of them from advocacy groups that participate in strategy meetings hosted by Rove – reliably distort the facts about progressive figures and the policies they support.

Bridge Project is a new effort to hold conservatives accountable. As outside groups flood the airwaves, we won't let their dishonest attacks go unanswered. The Ad Check section of our website currently features 88 fact checks of ads released since the beginning of March.

Furthermore, Bridge Project is committed to showing who really stands to benefit from conservative attempts to deceive the American people. Our interactive Conservative Transparency database allows visitors to follow the money trail between conservative groups and their most generous supporters. The funding database includes contributions to super PACs and outside groups running attack ads, as well as to conservative institutions promoting an extreme ideological agenda.

Readers can also get the facts about important issues with our Research Reads and watch the most outrageous statements made by conservative leaders in our Radical Rhetoric archive.

By keeping a watchful eye on the conservative movement, pushing back against false attacks, and following the money behind an agenda that would take the nation backward, we will hold conservatives accountable for putting their extreme ideology above the best interests of the American people.

Welcome to Bridge Project.

The Week In Conservative Attack Ads

On Monday we learned that just two conservative nonprofits have spent more on television ads in the presidential race than every super PAC combined. ProPublica's tally of advertising data shows that Americans for Prosperity and Karl Rove's Crossroads GPS have aired a combined $59.9 million in "ads mentioning a candidate for president."

There is plenty of action further down the ticket as well. Of the 14 ads Bridge Project fact checked in the last week, just two targeted President Obama. Eight came from Crossroads GPS, three from the 60 Plus Association (on which more below), two from AFP, and one from the Romney super PAC Restore Our Future. AFP's ads (one in the Wisconsin Senate race, the other an explicit recommendation against voting for Obama) focused on debt and the health care law. The debt – and dishonest claims about its sources – were the focus of three of Crossroads GPS' ads, while multiple ads disingenuously accused senators of voting to tax small businesses. A pair of Crossroads GPS ads in the Virginia Senate contest misrepresented Tim Kaine's record as governor and his stance on defense spending.

Recalculating: Crossroads GPS Takes A Detour In North Dakota

In an effort to paint well-liked North Dakota Senate candidate Heidi Heitkamp as a corrupt politician, Crossroads GPS cycled through a series of attempted hits on her service as the state's attorney general. But the group succeeded only in demonstrating its willingness to blatantly distort the facts. The first ad, "Hiding Taxes," alleged that Heitkamp "spent taxpayer dollars on private planes." But the same Bismarck Tribune article the ad cited said the planes were provided by the federal government at no charge, and that the Attorney General was using them to catch drug traffickers. The lie exposed, Crossroads GPS took the rare step of pulling the ad down, only to put it back up with the planes claim rewritten. The new language – Heitkamp "allowed staff to fly a taxpayer-funded plane" – stretches so hard to sound scandalous that it's almost funny.

By the end of the week, a third Heitkamp attack was on North Dakota airwaves, this one accusing her of a "pay to play" scheme with a lawyer who worked on the multi-state Master Settlement Agreement with tobacco companies. Rather than misrepresent real reporting, this time Crossroads GPS just cited the conservative Wall Street Journal editorial page and a right-wing talk radio host's blog. Actual news reports and documentary evidence disprove the ad's claims.

Ain't That A Shame: 60 Plus And Pat Boone To Lie To Seniors

The 60 Plus Association calls itself the conservative AARP, and since late last year it's been using aging crooner Pat Boone as its emissary to the seniors it claims to represent. This week voters in Montana, Florida and Ohio are seeing Boone label the Affordable Care Act "disastrous" and fearmonger about bureaucrats who will "deny you the care you deserve." This is 60 Plus' received about $375,000 in seed money from Republican donor Bruce Rastetter, who is connected to the Koch brothers through an ethanol production company whose growth he oversaw before selling its production facilities to Koch Industries.

FRC's Tony Perkins Takes Tampa

In advance of next week's Republican National Convention, party leaders are crafting an official platform that is "likely to be the most conservative in years," according to Politico. The influence of the conservative movement – and social conservatives in particular – became apparent this morning when the platform committee rejected a proposal to recognize civil unions between LGBT couples.

In fact, Family Research Council (FRC) president Tony Perkins claims to have written the marriage plank of the platform himself. "You should read the entire plank on marriage, which I wrote. I'm very happy with it," he said in an interview. Perkins also boasted that FRC had "help[ed] delegates hold the line on social issues," and that he personally contributed to "amendments on conscience rights, abortion in health care, and stem cell research."

Perkins' role is a reminder of the far right's influence over the national debate, especially when it comes to issues of equality. Beyond its opposition to "counterfeit marriage," FRC consistently fights against efforts to prevent anti-LGBT discrimination. Here are some lowlights from FRC's record:

> FRC: "Counterfeit Marriage" Endangers Society Like "Permitting Unqualified Individuals To Fly Airplanes." According to a Family Research Council "Issue Brief" titled "Ten Facts About Counterfeit Marriage": Discrimination occurs when someone is unjustly denied some benefit or opportunity. But it must first be demonstrated that such persons deserve to be treated equally regarding the point in question. For example, FAA and airline regulations rightly discriminate regarding who is allowed into the cockpit of an airplane. Those who are not trained pilots have no rightful claim to 'discrimination' because they are denied the opportunity to fly an airplane. Similarly, the accumulated wisdom of thousands of years of human history, as expressed in virtually all cultures, has defined marriage as between a man and a woman. Homosexual activists conveniently avoid the question of whether homosexual relationships merit being granted equality with marriage. Although not strictly comparable, radically altering the definition of marriage can also pose dangers to society in much the same way as permitting unqualified individuals to fly airplanes." # The Week In Conservative Attack Ads

Earlier this week, Crossroads GPS made the unusual decision to pull its support from a competitive Senate race, dropping planned ads attacking Missouri Democrat Claire McCaskill after tasteless comments on "legitimate rape" from her Republican opponent, Todd Akin, made headlines. The group's multi-million-dollar assault on the airwaves continued across other states, however. Of the 13 ads we fact-checked this week, Crossroads GPS was responsible for five of them, attacking Tammy Baldwin in Wisconsin, Bill Nelson in Florida, Martin Heinrich in New Mexico, Sherrod Brown in Ohio, and Jon Tester in Montana. We also looked at three ads from Koch-funded Americans for Prosperity, three from the American Future Fund, one from the National Federation of Independent Business, and one from pro-Romney super PAC Restore Our Future.

Most of the spots mentioned the Affordable Care Act, with many misrepresenting the facts to sell support for the law as support for a budget-busting behemoth. All three American Future Fund ads referred to the "$2 trillion health care law," a willful distortion that counts the law's costs but none of the savings to obscure the fact that the law reduces the deficit. Five of the ads (three from Crossroads GPS, one from AFP, and one from Restore Our Future) spread misinformation about the "failed" or "wasteful" stimulus, which actually helped save the economy from an even deeper recession.

Focus On Florida

This week showed particularly heavy interest in the Florida Senate race between Democrat Bill Nelson and Republican Connie Mack. Three separate conservative outside groups targeted the Sunshine State, each ad taking a different tack. Crossroads GPS took advantage of public confusion over the Affordable Care Act's impact on Medicare, dishonestly suggesting to Florida's seniors that their benefits will be cut and they'll lose control of their health care decisions. American Future Fund focused on the national debt, though it also mentioned the health care law and threw in a gratuitous line calling for Nelson to "protect seniors." NFIB, a business group that received $3.7 million from Crossroads GPS in 2010, took a more personal approach, highlighting a Florida business owner who claimed that a "conglomeration" of regulations were impairing his businesses' ability to grow.

Spotlight: American Future Fund

Although Karl Rove's Crossroads GPS and the Koch-linked Americans for Prosperity are fairly well-known, three of this week's ads came from the murkier American Future Fund, a group that claims to have spent around $25 million on the 2010 elections.

AFF's efforts are interlaced with those of other top conservative players through its participation in the Rove-headed Weaver Terrace Group strategy meetings and through its funding. The group's biggest known donor is the mysterious Center to Protect Patient Rights, which also gave generously to other conservative ad-makers like Americans for Prosperity and the 60 Plus Association, and is run by Koch operative Sean Noble, according to the Los Angeles Times. In addition, it

The Week In Conservative Attack Ads

This week, conservative power players descended on Tampa for the Republican National Convention. According to reports, leaders of conservative outside groups spent the week wooing GOP mega-donors, seeking even more cash for their final push to defeat President Obama.

Consequently, it was a slow week for the release of new ads. We fact-checked five conservative ads – four of them targeting separate Senate candidates, along with one unusual spot warning about "mass immigration." Notably, none of them came from Karl Rove's Crossroads groups, which sat the week out but made their presence felt in Tampa.

"Already Going Bankrupt"

Ever since President Obama signed the Affordable Care Act, its conservative opponents have complained that the law "cut" Medicare, the implication being that seniors would lose benefits. This has been a common theme in attack ads, but it now appears that conservative groups are trying out a new wrinkle.

Last week, Americans for Prosperity contended that the health care law "took over $700 billion from Medicare, which was already going bankrupt, to pay for more spending." 60 Plus Association echoed AFP this week, saying the ACA "cuts $700 billion from Medicare…to pay for more wasteful spending in Washington," adding that "Medicare is already going bankrupt."

The ads, running in Indiana and Virginia respectively, seem to suggest that the ACA will somehow contribute to Medicare "going bankrupt." In fact, the opposite is true. The health care law reduces future Medicare spending, allowing it to remain solvent for longer. As New York Times reported, undoing the law's Medicare savings would "hasten the insolvency of Medicare by eight years."

The Anti-Immigrant Rap

In addition to the standard lines of attack, we looked at a singular ad from NumbersUSA urging a reduction in the numbers of legal immigrants given green cards each year. Featuring a rap song performed by an actor playing an unemployed recent college graduate, the ad blamed immigrants for the difficulties of finding a job. That's a pretty common refrain from NumbersUSA, a nativist group with ties to John Tanton, an anti-immigrant activist with connections to the white nationalist movement. Since 2001, NumbersUSA has gotten over $800,000 from the Sarah Scaife Foundation and the Scaife Family Foundation, major funders Convention lie about a Wisconsin auto plant into a 60-second spot.

Crossroads GPS hit Rep. Shelley Berkley (D-NV) and Sen. Sherrod Brown (D-OH) with the standard misleading Medicare attacks ("Laughable" in Nevada and "Football" in Ohio), but got a bit more creative in Virginia. The group released two versions of an ad called "Teeth" that attacks Gov. Tim Kaine (D-VA) over education funding, and alleged in another that his support for the congressional debt ceiling deal meant he "supports cutting what matters: our jobs." Karl Rove's behemoth also launched two presidential ads, taking an Obama quote out of context in Nevada and scrambling to defend Mitt Romney's tax plans in "Broke."

GPS Tacks On "Magic Words"

It's nothing new to see Crossroads GPS dominate the week's advertising. But with less than 60 days to Election Day, nonprofits like GPS would have to disclose funders of any "issue ads" that name a federal candidate. But the federal lawsuit that closed the issue ads loophole didn't address express advocacy from social welfare groups, so GPS is now implementing a strategy other nonprofit behemoths hinted at earlier this summer.

So what does the change look like? You won't detect it in our transcripts of this week's ads. So far, GPS is simply slapping the word "vote" into the on-screen text at the end of each ad. In some cases, that means they're telling viewers to "Vote No on Tim Kaine." In the Nevada presidential spot, the text riffs off the out-of-context Obama quote at the heart of the ad: "This election...don't blow another vote on Obama."

Values Voters Summit Speakers Warn

households no longer paying income tax – mainly working poor families and seniors – should be brought onto the income tax rolls. 'Marco Rubio was right when he said we don't have enough people paying taxes in this country,' he said, referring to the senator from Florida." [Wall Street Journal, 8/21/11]

Heritage Foundation Portrayed Those Who Pay No Income Taxes As "The Non-Taxpaying Public" Who "Paid Nothing." From the Heritage Foundation: "One of the most worrying trends in the Index [of Dependence on Government] is the coinciding growth in the non-taxpaying public. The percentage of people who do not pay federal income taxes, and who are not claimed as dependents by someone who does pay them, jumped from 14.8 percent in 1984 to 49.5 percent in 2009. This means that in 1984, 34.8 million tax filers paid no taxes; in 2009, 151.7 million paid nothing." [Heritage.org, 2/8/12]

House Majority Leader Cantor Said "Everybody Should Have Some Skin In The Game, Even If It's A Dollar." During an appearance at Rice University, Rep. Eric Cantor (R-VA) said: "You speak about sort of the fairness issue in the tax code, and I agree that the tax code does not breed fair results. And we've got to look to see and make sure it's a balanced approach. But right now what you have is almost I think almost 46, 47 percent of the people of this country don't pay any income taxes. Now to me, I gotta ask, is that fair? I mean I think everybody should have some skin in the game, even if it's a dollar, we ought to have people willing to make sure, or making sure that they're part of what we're trying to do." [Cantor Remarks via YouTube.com, 11/10/11]

Conservative Activists Launched "We Are The 53 Percent" Site To Decry Americans Who Don't Pay Income Taxes. From the Washington Post: "Conservative activists have created a Tumblr called 'We are the 53 percent' that's meant to be a counterpunch to the viral 'We are the 99 percent' site that's become a prominent symbol for the Occupy Wall Street movement. The Tumblr is supposed to represent the 53 percent of Americans who pay federal income taxes, and its assumption is that the Wall Street protesters are part of the 46 percent of the country who don't. 'We are the 53 percent' was originally the brainchild of Erick Erickson, founder of RedState.org, who worked together with Josh Trevino, communications director for the right-leaning Texas Public Policy Foundation, and conservative filmmaker Mike Wilson to develop the site, according to Trevino. The overriding message is that the protesters have failed to take personal responsibility, blaming their economic troubles on others. 'Suck it up you whiners. I am the 53 percent subsidizing you so you can hang out on Wall Street and complain,' writes Erickson, in the Tumblr's inaugural post." [Washington Post, 10/10/11, emphasis added]

This new orthodoxy on the right is provocative, but it's also based on an erroneous understanding of who pays which taxes.

The Week In Conservative Attack Ads

We added eight ad checks this week, with conservative outside groups focusing their fire on the Nevada, Virginia and Ohio Senate races. Only two of them didn't come from Crossroads GPS: an obscure group called the Treasure Coast Jobs Coalition lobbed tired Recovery Act claims at Rep. Allen West's (R-FL) opponent, and the American Future Fund turned Paul Ryan's Republican National

The Week In Conservative Attack Ads

This week, conservatives flooded the airwaves with attacks on Democratic candidates. We fact-checked a total of 21 new ads, exceeding our total from the previous three weeks combined. The increase in volume was marked by 11 spots targeting House candidates, signaling a heightened focus on lower-level races as we approach the final stretch of campaign season.

New Players, Same Money?

Karl Rove's groups were active as usual – American Crossroads launched a misleading attack on President Obama and Crossroads GPS targeted three Senate hopefuls – but they let some of their allies lead the charge this week.

The House ads we fact-checked included five from the Center for Individual Freedom, three from the American Action Network (along with one from the AAN-affiliated Congressional Leadership Fund), and two from the National Federation of Independent Business. Notably, Crossroads GPS made sizable "social welfare" contributions to both CFIF ($2.75 million) and NFIB ($3.7 million) in 2010 – and CFIF spent just slightly less than its haul, $2.5 million, on political ads. Crossroads GPS also gave $500,000 to AAN, which in turn gave approximately the same amount ($499,895) to American Crossroads.

On the Senate side, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce went after five candidates, heavily emphasizing their alleged failures on energy policy. Wisconsin's Tammy Baldwin was the only candidate subjected to attacks from both Crossroads GPS and the Chamber.

Where Are The Jobs?

While there were plenty of dishonest claims about Medicare, energy policy, and taxes, one subject was conspicuously absent in many of this week's ads: the economy. Indeed, the word "job" showed up in just eight of 21 ads, typically in the context of specific policy gripes rather than grim representations of the overall economic climate. After the creation of 4.6 million jobs over 30 consecutive months of private-sector growth, perhaps conservatives are realizing that their efforts to assign blame for the consequences of the Great Recession aren't fooling anyone.

Romney's "47 Percent" Comments Reflect Conservative Dogma

The Mother Jones video of Mitt Romney telling his donors that the 47 percent of Americans who pay no income tax are entitled, dependent "victims" is consistent with the nominee's preference for addressing inequality "in quiet rooms." But this is no mere pander to wealthy Republican donors. In the Obama era, conservatives have fully embraced the notion that those who owe no federal income tax must have more "skin in the game." That means raising income taxes on the bottom 47 percent of earners.

In August of last year, the Wall Street Journal labeled this soak-the-poor idea "the new Republican orthodoxy." Indeed, Republican leaders, movement activists, and powerful conservative institutions have pushed for "skin in the game," for higher taxes on the bottom half of the income distribution.

The Week In Conservative Attack Ads

After last week's wave of House ads, conservative outside groups focused most of their attention on the Senate this week. Of the 14 ads we fact-checked, eight of them targeted Senate hopefuls (five from Karl Rove's Crossroads groups and three from the U.S. Chamber of Commerce), compared to only two hitting House candidates (both from the Congressional Leadership Fund). We also answered presidential ads from Restore Our Future, Americans for Job Security, and American Future Fund. Finally, Americans for Prosperity joined the conservative campaign to oust three Florida Supreme Court justices.

Koch Connections

Americans for Prosperity didn't release new TV ads in any federal races, but that doesn't mean the Koch brothers' influence was absent from the airwaves. Two groups with financial ties to the Kochs issued attacks on President Obama.

Americans for Job Security put $8.2 million behind an ad that paints a misleading picture of the economy and declares, "The future is getting worse under Obama." A self-described "bipartisan, pro-business" group, AJS does not disclose its donors. However, its largest known source of funding in the midterm election cycle was the mysterious Center to Protect Patient Rights ($4,828,000), which is run by a reported "Koch operative."

American Future Fund also released a presidential ad in Minnesota that attempts – misleadingly – to use the president's own words against him. The Iowa-based group received seed money from hog and ethanol "baron" Bruce Rastetter, but it is similarly secretive about its donors. In 2010, AFF received $11,685,000 from the Koch-linked Center to Protect Patient Rights, accounting for about half of its revenue for the year.

Messaging Medicare

The message of the week was clear in Florida, where American Crossroads and the U.S. Chamber of Commerce accused Sen. Bill Nelson (D) of supporting Medicare cuts. Both groups misrepresent the Affordable Care Act's impact on seniors, while ignoring the fact that Nelson's opponent, Rep. Connie Mack (R), voted for the same reductions in future Medicare spending (along with Rep. Paul Ryan's plan to transform Medicare into a voucher program). Americans for Prosperity reinforced the message with its ACA-based attack on three Florida Supreme Court justices, which claimed the health care law allows "unelected bureaucrats" to "cut Medicare."

The "nonpartisan" analysis comes from the American Enterprise Institute, a decidedly conservative think tank in Washington, DC. In fact, Romney's economic team includes at least three people affiliated with AEI. Romney advisers Glenn Hubbard and Gregory Mankiw are both listed on AEI's website as "visiting scholars." Hubbard, who preceded Mankiw as chairman of President George W. Bush's Council of Economic Advisers, was "an architect of the Bush tax cuts in 2001 and 2003," according to the Washington Post. Another economic adviser and surrogate, Kevin Hassett, is AEI's Director of Economic Policy Studies.

The author of the report backing Romney's position is Alex Brill, an AEI research fellow who also served on President George W. Bush's Council on Economic Advisers. While Brill insists that Romney's plan is "not a tax hike on the middle class," he has previously criticized President Obama's preference for tax cuts geared toward the middle class instead of the wealthiest Americans. In October 2008, Brill co-authored an op-ed arguing that "rate cuts for high incomes or reductions in investment taxes" are superior to Obama's "tax favors for the middle class."

Rhetorically, this week saw a heavy focus on supposed threats to small business jobs, with six of the ads mentioning small businesses specifically. But most of the conservative claims about "small business" rely on distortions – for example, the conservative definition of a small business often includes large corporations and wealthy individuals rather than the mom-and-pop businesses the term conjures for most people. And the health care law, often cited as a source of crippling new taxes on small business, actually offers tax credits that will help those small businesses provide their employees with health insurance.

Gunning For A Republican President

This week's ad from the NRA, a $1.5 million buy the group says it's airing in Ohio, Virginia, Florida and Wisconsin, is a citation- and fact-free attack on President Obama – although he's not named in the version of the ad we saw. "They're attacking our Second Amendment rights," the ad warns, before urging viewers to vote for Romney, who signed an assault weapons ban as governor of Massachusetts. But despite the ad's heavy hinting about the president's hostility toward gun owners, Obama has affirmed the U.S.' "strong tradition of gun ownership," and the only gun laws he's signed while in office have expanded gun owners' carrying rights.

A Pro-LGBT Republican Super PAC Attacks A Pro-LGBT Candidate

American Unity PAC, a super PAC that has so far been a minor player in the election, rolled out an ad late last week hitting California House candidate Raul Ruiz. Launched earlier this year with funding from billionaire Paul Singer, the PAC's unusual focus is on nudging Republican candidates with a good track record on LGBT issues towards full endorsement of marriage equality. But American Unity PAC's anti-Ruiz ad doesn't mention marriage, or any LGBT issue whatsoever. Instead, it peddles conservative talking points that mislead on the Affordable Care Act. Ruiz has voiced full support for marriage equality, while his Republican opponent, Rep. Mary Bono Mack, has stopped short of doing so.

"Nonpartisan Study" Backing Romney's Tax Plan Comes From Conservative Think Tank That Employed Romney Advisers

In an effort to discredit the Tax Policy Center's conclusion that Mitt Romney's tax plan would either impose higher taxes on the middle class or require increased deficits, Republicans are touting a supposedly "nonpartisan study" proving otherwise. Last week, the Romney campaign released a television ad referencing the study that purports to refute the criticism of Romney's plan.

The Week In Conservative Attack Ads

It's no surprise that conservative outside groups are ramping up their ad spending as November approaches. Counting spots released last Friday afternoon, we fact-checked 36 conservative attack ads this week, our highest one-week tally yet. The large total was driven by an increased focus on House races, which accounted for two-thirds of the ads we answered.

Once again, Karl Rove's groups dominated the airwaves. As it does most weeks, American Crossroads issued a new attack on President Obama, this one attempting to undermine clear signs that the economy is picking up. Meanwhile, Crossroads GPS targeted eight House candidates go to along with six Senate candidates, which notably included Maine independent Angus King.

Senate Tag Team

Two hotly contested Senate contests featured multiple groups piling on the Democratic candidates, each emphasizing different lines of attack.

In Virginia, former Gov. Tim Kaine was the subject of ads from Crossroads GPS, American Commitment, and Independence Virginia PAC. The ad from American Commitment, which distorted Kaine's record on coal, was the group's first since the summer. The group does not disclose its donors, but its president is Phil Kerpen, who was previously a vice president at the Koch-backed Americans for Prosperity. Independence Virginia PAC has received $1 million this year from Texas homebuilder Bob Perry, a major funder of both American Crossroads and Restore Our Future.

Rep. Joe Donnelly, who is running to replace outgoing Indiana Sen. Dick Lugar (R), was targeted by Crossroads GPS and Club for Growth, whose effort to paint the moderate congressman as fiscally reckless was especially futile. The Club for Growth spot hits Donnelly for 11 different votes, listing obscure provisions in appropriations bills he supported. In each case, however, Donnelly voted along with large bipartisan majorities of more than 300 representatives.

ATR Embraces Medicare Falsehoods

After the Crossroads groups, the most prolific conservative group in the last seven days was Grover Norquist's Americans for Tax Reform, which issued ads in seven House races. Four of the ads were basically identical, targeting two challengers and two incumbents over the Affordable Care Act. Predictably, ATR misrepresented the health care law as a "middle-class tax," but the anti-tax group put just as much weight on alleged Medicare cuts and "unelected bureaucrats with the power to cut further." Of course, those are common conservative distortions of the Affordable Care Act's impact on Medicare. It's also worth noting that one of ATR's targets, Rep. John Barrow (D-GA), actually voted against the law, but he opposes full repeal because he wants to protect its most popular provisions.

The Week In Conservative Attack Ads

Including a stray late-Friday-afternoon spot that didn't make it into our roundup from last week, Bridge Project fact-checked 10 conservative ads this week. Eight of those were from the usual players – the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, which focused on House races, Crossroads GPS, which took on its usual Senate targets, and American Crossroads, with a presidential ad. The remaining two came from the National Rifle Association and American Unity PAC, more minor players on the electioneering ad scene.

False Facts: Why Conservative Groups Hope You Won't Check Their Sources

Mitt Romney's citation of "six studies" confirming his claims about his tax plan has unraveled rather completely at this point. When a candidate makes that kind of claim, it receives deserved scrutiny, and fact checkers rightly shredded the Republican's line. But the evidence offered by conservative outside groups in political ads receive much less attention, despite being a near-constant presence in voters' lives on television, radio, and the web.

The network of outside-money conservative groups we monitor often don't bother trying to ground their claims in objective truth. Some of their most effective TV ads rely on debatable interpretations of legislation or public statements, and many simply deprive the viewer of context in order to mislead. Others cite only a piece of legislation or a floor vote, while making un-cited claims about what that vote or law meant for voters. But these well-heeled organizations tend to get themselves in trouble when they cite more specific studies or news reports to support their claims.

Sometimes, the mistaken citations are so egregious that they must be intentional. When Crossroads GPS accused Heidi Heitkamp of spending public funds on private planes, it cited a North Dakota newspaper article that completely contradicted the claim. (The group modified the ad without actually dropping the false claim about airplanes, after getting a warning from one TV station.) Crossroads GPS was back at it this week, this time in Maine. As the narrator accuses former Gov. Angus King of turning a surplus "into a nearly $1 billion shortfall," a citation pops up on screen from a Maine newspaper. The piece in question appears to be an op-ed dedicated to debunking the very claim Crossroads is making about King's record, by a former state budget official who calls their version of events "a lie."

This kind of brazen misrepresentation of a source is not as uncommon as you might think. Just since August 1, we've identified 16 separate ads that cite a source that actually says the opposite of what the ad suggests, including one that accuses a Texas Democrat of casting votes he simply did not.

The most common opposite-day citation? A study by the research firm Ernst & Young, commissioned by Republican-boosting business groups, that actually says in a footnote that it is not an analysis of the president's actual proposal on taxes....

The Week In Conservative Attack Ads

In the penultimate week before Election Day, conservative outside groups once again flooded the airwaves with attacks on Democratic candidates. Ten conservative groups were responsible for the 31 televisions ads we fact-checked – 16 of them targeting House candidates, 10 aimed at Senate candidates, and five attacking President Obama or cheerleading for Mitt Romney. As they did last week, Karl Rove's American Crossroads and Crossroads GPS led the way, accounting for 12 of the ads we debunked. Since Monday, the two groups have announced four separate ad buys totaling a whopping $22.8 million.

Aside from American Crossroads and Crossroads GPS, several groups contributed to the assault on President Obama and Democratic Senate candidates. Restore Our Future, 60 Plus, and the American Future Fund each weighed in on the presidential race. We also fact-checked two Senate ads from the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and one apiece from American Commitment and Hardworking Americans Committee.

Coleman Groups Drill House Candidates With Oil-Funded Ads

But the most prolific groups focused on the House, where, in addition to four spots from Crossroads GPS, we answered five ads from the Congressional Leadership Fund, four from American Action Network, and three from Grover Norquist's Americans for Tax Reform. Former Minnesota senator Norm Coleman is the chairman of both CLF, a super PAC, and AAN, a nonprofit that does not disclose its donors. CLF's top individual contributors are billionaire Romney boosters Sheldon Adelson and Bob Perry, but it also recently received $2.5 million from Chevron – the "largest contribution from a publicly traded corporation" since the Citizens United decision – which is a good indication of who Big Oil expects to prioritize its interests in the next Congress.

Getting Personal

At this point, the attacks on President Obama and Democratic Senate candidates are fairly predictable, typically misrepresenting the impact of progressive policies and often relying on sources that contradict their conclusions. In the House, however, conservative groups tend to get more personal – and to veer even further from reality. For instance, AAN is running an ad in California that blasts Democratic candidate Jose Hernandez for living in Texas prior to his run for office, going so far as to portray Hernandez dressed as a cowboy. The crucial missing detail, of cousre, is that Hernandez only lived in Houston while working at NASA as an astronaut.

of a "socialist-style economy." But despite that avowed free-market ideology, he's used his wealth to tilt the playing field in his favor on everything from nuclear waste deals to custom-built regulatory shams in Texas, to complex business dealings in Macau. And his attitude toward his own workforce is far less generous than his philanthropic giving might suggest: His companies brag of being "entirely union-free" (though they're quieter about their thousands of safety violations), one group of employees resorted to a hunger strike for pay equity with their English-speaking colleagues, and his primary revenue stream – the casino empire – is under investigation by the feds and mired in a nasty legal battle with his former business partner.

Here's a rundown of the 16 real men who've combined to give over $150 million – just that we know about, and not counting reported donations to anonymously funded groups – to conservative super PACs during this cycle:

16 Men, Over $150 Million: The DNA Of A Conservative Megadonor

This post has been edited to reflect an updated total for Sheldon Adelson.

You haven't heard of him because he doesn't actually exist. But if you threw the 16 people who have given more than $2 million conservative super PACs this cycle into a genetic recombinator that would average them according to the amount each gave, you'd end up with a plutocrat straight out of central casting. He would be over 75 years old. He would be a white man. If you pooled his progenitors' wealth rather than average it, he would be worth something like $51 billion. That fortune comes primarily from the casino and finance industries (but also draws on coal company holdings, real estate empires, entertainment promotion, and even a skin cream sales multi-level marketing scheme). If he were a country, he'd be about the 71st largest economy in the world, well ahead of places like Uruguay, Kenya, and Lithuania.

He's fond of saying that President Obama will "eliminate free enterprise" in favor

Karl Rove's Decade Of Deception

Today, the Bridge Project is releasing this video in response to the misleading Crossroads ad on Benghazi. Called, "Karl Rove's Decade of Deception," the video highlights Rove's dangerous habit of misleading the American public on matters of national security – just to score political points. From selling the war in Iraq, fudging intelligence, Valerie Plame, and the new Crossroads ad on Benghazi, Rove has been deceiving Americans for more than a decade.

There Is An Unusually Large Gap Between Federal Revenues And Outlays. From FactCheck.org: "There is a growing consensus in Washington that there needs to be a combination of increased revenues and spending cuts to close the big gap that has developed in recent years between revenues and outlays. As a percentage of the nation's economy, the gap between what Washington spends (22.7 percent) and collects in revenues (15.7 percent) narrowed slightly in the last fiscal year. But the federal government is still a long way from the times when revenues more closely matched spending — as you can see from the chart below. We created the chart using historical budget data from the federal Office of Management and Budget, updated with Treasury Department figures for the fiscal year ending Sept. 30, 2012." FactCheck.org also included the following chart:

[FactCheck.org, 11/30/12]

GOP Counter-Offer Cuts More From Spending Without Raising Rates. From CBS News: "Mr. Obama's latest, publicly disclosed, 'fiscal cliff' proposal calls for $1.6 trillion in new revenues, achieved in part from letting the Bush-era tax cuts expire for the wealthiest Americans, as well as $600 billion in spending cuts. Republicans put forward a counter offer that is made up of $900 billion in spending cuts and $800 billion in new revenues achieved through tax reform—not tax increases." [CBS News via KHOU.com, 12/5/12]

CBO: Raising Taxes Would Have Minimal Negative Economic Impact, But Spending Cuts Will Disproportionately Harm Growth. From the Washington Post: "A new study (pdf) by the International Monetary Fund raises a further warning flag for fiscal cliff negotiators in the U.S. In what it bills as the first-ever study of its kind, the fund analyzed decades of data on the world's major industrialized countries to estimate how changes in government spending or revenue affect economic output. The news isn't good. Given current circumstances, with a U.S. economy that is growing but still trying to make up lost ground from the 2008 crisis, a one dollar change in government spending could knock as much as $1.80 in output from the economy – what fund researchers called a 'statistically significant...and sizeable' outcome. One brighter spot that could also influence negotiators: the growth impact of a tax hike is estimated to be negligible. The list of measures that automatically become law absent an agreement include both spending reductions and tax increases. While the spending cuts would comprise a heavy drag on growth, the fund paper suggests that a one percent rise in tax revenue would knock just 0.1 percent from gross domestic product." ## Crossroads GPS: "Over"

Fresh off an electoral battering, Crossroads GPS is picking up the pieces and regrouping with a fresh "issue" ad tarring the president's opening bid on a deal to avert the upcoming tax increases and spending cuts known collectively as the "fiscal cliff." The group's accusations about a "huge tax increase" without accompanying spending reforms fall short, however. President Obama's initial offering included both revenue increases – $1.6 trillion, to come primarily from an expiration of top-bracket tax rate cuts and limiting deductions – and $600 billion in spending cuts, most of which would come from health care programs.

Obama's Proposal Includes Both Spending Cuts And Needed Revenues

Obama's Proposal Includes Both Spending Cuts And New Revenue. From Bloomberg: "What does Obama want? The president wants $1.6 trillion in tax increases over the next decade. He has proposed $600 billion in spending cuts, about $350 billion of which would come from health-care programs. He also counts the $1 trillion in spending cuts Congress passed in 2011, $800 billion in savings from winding down the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan and $600 billion in interest savings, according to senior administration officials. Leaving aside the administration's call for measures to boost short-term economic growth, which could take the form of tax cuts or spending increases, this would result in $2.4 trillion in spending cuts and $1.6 trillion in higher taxes." [Bloomberg, 12/3/12]

Proposed $1.6 Trillion In Tax Increases Fall Mostly On Top Earners. From Bloomberg: "The administration's plans call for a two-stage tax increase that would raise taxes by $1.6 trillion over 10 years. Right now, they want to let the 2001 and 2003 tax cuts expire for top earners. That would push the top tax rate on capital gains to 23.8 percent, the top rate on ordinary income to 39.6 percent and the top rate on dividends to 43.4 percent. The plan would reinstate limits on personal exemptions and deductions. What comes in stage two? By Aug. 1, the administration wants Congress to pass a plan that would enact the rest of the administration's tax agenda -- about $600 billion in higher taxes. What the administration has proposed in its budget beyond the immediate rate increases is about $1 trillion in tax increases and about $360 billion in tax cuts. That's a net tax increase of more than $600 billion. Some of the increases would make it more difficult for U.S.-based companies to defer taxes on income earned overseas. The cuts include a permanent extension of a tuition tax credit and the credit for corporate research. The biggest increase would reduce the value of top earners' tax breaks by requiring them to take such breaks

Four of the ads were basically identical, targeting two challengers and two incumbents over the Affordable Care Act. Predictably, ATR misrepresented the health care law as a "middle-class tax," but the anti-tax group put just as much weight on alleged Medicare cuts and "unelected bureaucrats with the power to cut further." Of course, those are common conservative distortions of the Affordable Care Act's impact on Medicare. It's also worth noting that one of ATR's targets, Rep. John Barrow (D-GA), actually voted against the law, but he opposes full repeal because he wants to protect its most popular provisions.

Mitt Romney's citation of "six studies" confirming his claims about his tax plan has unraveled rather completely at this point. When a candidate makes that kind of claim, it receives deserved scrutiny, and fact checkers rightly shredded the Republican's line. But the evidence offered by conservative outside groups in political ads receive much less attention, despite being a near-constant presence in voters' lives on television, radio, and the web.

The network of outside-money conservative groups we monitor often don't bother trying to ground their claims in objective truth. Some of their most effective TV ads rely on debatable interpretations of legislation or public statements, and many simply deprive the viewer of context in order to mislead. Others cite only a piece of legislation or a floor vote, while making un-cited claims about what that vote or law meant for voters. But these well-heeled organizations tend to get themselves in trouble when they cite more specific studies or news reports to support their claims.

Sometimes, the mistaken citations are so egregious that they must be intentional. When Crossroads GPS accused Heidi Heitkamp of spending public funds on private planes, it cited a North Dakota newspaper article that completely contradicted the claim. (The group modified the ad without actually dropping the false claim about airplanes, after getting a warning from one TV station.) Crossroads GPS was back at it this week, this time in Maine. As the narrator accuses former Gov. Angus King of turning a surplus "into a nearly $1 billion shortfall," a citation pops up on screen from a Maine newspaper. The piece in question appears to be an op-ed dedicated to debunking the very claim Crossroads is making about King's record, by a former state budget official who calls their version of events "a lie."

This kind of brazen misrepresentation of a source is not as uncommon as you might think. Just since August 1, we've identified 16 separate ads that cite a source that actually says the opposite of what the ad suggests, including one that accuses a Texas Democrat of casting votes he simply did not.

The most common opposite-day citation? A study by the research firm Ernst & Young, commissioned by Republican-boosting business groups, that actually says in a footnote that it is not an analysis of the president's actual proposal on taxes....

The Week In Conservative Attack Ads

It's no surprise that conservative outside groups are ramping up their ad spending as November approaches. Counting spots released last Friday afternoon, we fact-checked 36 conservative attack ads this week, our highest one-week tally yet.

In the penultimate week before Election Day, conservative outside groups once again flooded the airwaves with attacks on Democratic candidates. Ten conservative groups were responsible for the 31 televisions ads we fact-checked – 16 of them targeting House candidates, 10 aimed at Senate candidates, and five attacking President Obama or cheerleading for Mitt Romney. As they did last week, Karl Rove's American Crossroads and Crossroads GPS led the way, accounting for 12 of the ads we debunked. Since Monday, the two groups have announced four separate ad buys totaling a whopping $22.8 million.

Aside from American Crossroads and Crossroads GPS, several groups contributed to the assault on President Obama and Democratic Senate candidates. Restore Our Future, 60 Plus, and the American Future Fund each weighed in on the presidential race. We also fact-checked two Senate ads from the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and one apiece from American Commitment and Hardworking Americans Committee.

Coleman Groups Drill House Candidates With Oil-Funded Ads

But the most prolific groups focused on the House, where, in addition to four spots from Crossroads GPS, we answered five ads from the Congressional Leadership Fund, four from American Action Network, and three from Grover Norquist's Americans for Tax Reform. Former Minnesota senator Norm Coleman is the chairman of both CLF, a super PAC, and AAN, a nonprofit that does not disclose its donors. CLF's top individual contributors are billionaire Romney boosters Sheldon Adelson and Bob Perry, but it also recently received $2.5 million from Chevron – the "largest contribution from a publicly traded corporation" since the Citizens United decision – which is a good indication of who Big Oil expects to prioritize its interests in the next Congress.

Getting Personal

At this point, the attacks on President Obama and Democratic Senate candidates are fairly predictable, typically misrepresenting the impact of progressive policies and often relying on sources that contradict their conclusions. In the House, however, conservative groups tend to get more personal – and to veer even further from reality. For instance, AAN is running an ad in California that blasts Democratic candidate Jose Hernandez for living in Texas prior to his run for office, going so far as to portray Hernandez dressed as a cowboy. The crucial missing detail, of cousre, is that Hernandez only lived in Houston while working at NASA as an astronaut.

False Facts: Why Conservative Groups Hope You Won't Check Their Sources

You haven't heard of him because he doesn't actually exist. But if you threw the 16 people who have given more than $2 million conservative super PACs this cycle into a genetic recombinator that would average them according to the amount each gave, you'd end up with a plutocrat straight out of central casting. He would be over 75 years old. He would be a white man. If you pooled his progenitors' wealth rather than average it, he would be worth something like $51 billion. That fortune comes primarily from the casino and finance industries (but also draws on coal company holdings, real estate empires, entertainment promotion, and even a skin cream sales multi-level marketing scheme). If he were a country, he'd be about the 71st largest economy in the world, well ahead of places like Uruguay, Kenya, and Lithuania.

He's fond of saying that President Obama will "eliminate free enterprise" in favor of a "socialist-style economy." But despite that avowed free-market ideology, he's used his wealth to tilt the playing field in his favor on everything from nuclear waste deals to custom-built regulatory shams in Texas, to complex business dealings in Macau. And his attitude toward his own workforce is far less generous than his philanthropic giving might suggest: His companies brag of being "entirely union-free" (though they're quieter about their thousands of safety violations), one group of employees resorted to a hunger strike for pay equity with their English-speaking colleagues, and his primary revenue stream – the casino empire – is under investigation by the feds and mired in a nasty legal battle with his former business partner.

Here's a rundown of the 16 real men who've combined to give over $150 million – just that we know about, and not counting reported donations to anonymously funded groups – to conservative super PACs during this cycle:

Today, the Bridge Project is releasing this video in response to the misleading Crossroads ad on Benghazi. Called, "Karl Rove's Decade of Deception," the video highlights Rove's dangerous habit of misleading the American public on matters of national security – just to score political points. From selling the war in Iraq, fudging intelligence, Valerie Plame, and the new Crossroads ad on Benghazi, Rove has been deceiving Americans for more than a decade.

reproductive rights, what ought to be an issue of effective and practical modern public health policy has been reframed by the right as a threat to religious liberty. Despite an exception to the HHS rule allowing religiously affiliated employers to avoid paying premiums that support contraceptives by shifting the responsibility onto insurers, conservatives remain outraged. But the outside groups and politicians who persist in protesting over the issue are at odds with the American public.

The Truth About Tax Cuts For The Rich, Deregulation, And Job Creation

Despite demanding immediate deficit reduction in a difficult economy, conservatives insist that any increase in tax rates for top income earners will kill jobs. Instead, they argue for lowering tax rates on the wealthiest Americans (while downplaying the deficit impact of such a tax cut) as way to increase hiring. There is no evidence for this argument, however intuitive it may seem. Lower tax rates on the rich are not associated with more hiring or stonger GDP growth, and while conservatives insist that top income tax rates hit small businesses heavily, their ludicrous definition of "small business" renders that statement meaningless. Along with the threat of higher taxes, conservatives insist that federal regulations are holding back job creation and have made loosening the rules a focus of their agenda. However, tax breaks for the wealthy and deregulation do almost nothing to increase consumer demand, which is the true driver of hiring and expansion decisions.

Rep. Paul Ryan's Severely Conservative Budget Benefits The Rich At The Expense Of The Vulnerable

07-31-2012

Those familiar with House Budget Committee Chairman Paul Ryan's (R-WI) last budget proposal won't be shocked at this year's updated "Path to Prosperity," a fiscal plan for 2013 and beyond that pledges policy prescriptions for "safeguarding America from the perils of debt, doubt and decline." Like the old version of the "Path," Ryan's second attempt at engineering fiscal policy – including recommendations for overhauling the tax code, cutting spending, and reforming Medicare and Medicaid – takes an axe to federal spending that benefits those without political or economic power but showers tax breaks on the wealthy. With its absence of reasonable solutions for lowering debt and its far-fetched proposals to shift the country's fiscal burdens onto the poor and middle class, the latest Ryan plan is at heart the same as the old one: A blueprint not for stabilizing the country's fiscal situation but for forcing an ultra-conservative vision on the federal government.

Conservative Hostility To Women's Rights Doesn't Stop At Health Care

Amid a decades-long crusade against abortion rights and a more recent uproar over access to contraceptives, conservatives' efforts to intrude upon women's control over their own health care are well publicized. But the GOP of recent years has also demonstrated that women's physical safety, economic security, and equal access to the workforce are increasingly low on the priority list. For the first time since its initial 1994 passage, the GOP has put up a fight against reauthorizing the Violence Against Women Act. Republicans on both the state and national level have sneered at the need for laws that address the fact that women still earn only about 75 percent of what men do for performing the same jobs. Conservatives have rejected legislation to mandate paid parental leave – something every other economically advanced country in the world requires. They are skeptical about allowing women to serve in military combat roles despite an on-the-ground reality that already puts women in dangerous combat situations. And they are dismissive of an Equal Rights Amendment that would afford the same weight to sex-based discrimination that the 14th Amendment currently gives race-based discrimination.

It's Not Just Abortion: The Far-Reaching Conservative War On Women's Health

07-29-2012

Attempts to restrict women's access to legal and safe abortion is only the tip of the iceberg when it comes to the conservative assault on women's health care. Conservatives, particularly the increasingly right-wing House Republicans who rode into the majority on a Tea Party wave, have also sought to undermine and defund a variety of what ought to be non-divisive women's health care services. Over the last year or so, conservatives have ramped up the war on women's health care, including access to contraceptives, preventive services like cancer screenings, and programs that promote maternal and childhood health.

Contraceptive Coverage: No Bitter Pill For Most Americans

The arguments in favor of the new Health and Human Services (HHS) rule requiring employers to provide health plans that cover contraceptives with no cost-sharing are overwhelming. Yet, as is often the case in matters concerning women's health and current benefits – and the controversial GOP plan authored by Rep. Paul Ryan (R-WI) actually retained almost all of the spending reductions in the law. ACA also reduces overpayments to Medicare Advantage, a private alternative to the federally run plan, and creates a Senate-confirmed board of experts to find future savings. Meanwhile, conservative critics fail to mention that ACA closes the prescription drug "donut hole," provides free preventive services to millions of seniors, and extends the program's solvency.

More Bad Medicine For Seniors In Latest Ryan Budget 08-06-2012

House Budget Chairman Paul Ryan (R-WI) is out with an updated version of his fiscal blueprint for the country, replacing last year's widely panned plan to effectively end Medicare by turning it into a voucher system with an only slightly less destructive concoction. In his latest proposal, Ryan pitches a premium-support system that would offer seniors a voucher to buy either traditional Medicare or a private plan, purporting to control costs by allowing competition. But the vouchers wouldn't be able to keep up with rapidly rising medical costs, shifting the burden onto beneficiaries and eventually rendering traditional Medicare an unviable program.

Ryan Medicare Plan Eliminates Health Security For America's Seniors 08-05-2012

In 2011, House Budget Committee Chairman Paul Ryan (R-WI) introduced a controversial plan that he claimed would "save" Medicare. The proposal was included in the House budget, which passed the lower chamber with nearly unanimous support from Republicans but was voted down in the Senate. The Medicare debate rages on, however, and the facts about the Ryan plan are too often obscured by the aggressive spin of its supporters and distracting arguments about the definition of words like "end" and "voucher." Whatever the right wants to call it, the Ryan plan is radical legislation that would hurt millions of Americans who rely on Medicare for health security.

What Americans Lose If Conservatives Get Their Way On The Affordable Care Act 08-04-2012

After several failed attempts to repeal or defund the Affordable Care Act, conservative candidates are persisting in making the destruction of the landmark health care reform law a campaign issue, with many promising to do away with the law come 2013. But the benefits in the law are already kicking in, and repealing the law would affect millions of Americans who are already seeing lower health care costs, better services, and protection against industry abuses.

Private-Sector Recovery Diminished By Shrinking Government Payrolls 08-03-2012

It's unremarkable for President Obama's opponents to deride his career in public service; ever since Ronald Reagan ran into term limits, conservatives have insisted that business experience is more important in the White House than intellect, vision, and policy knowledge. But conservative reverence for the business world and disdain for government work is so dogmatic today that Republicans often claim that Obama's policies have primarily, or even only, benefitted the public sector at the expense of the private economy. This is nonsense. The primary difference between the Obama recovery and the previous three post-recession economies, other than the depth of the crater Wall Street's actions created, is that where government payrolls expanded under Presidents Bush, Clinton, and Reagan, the public sector has shed well over half a million jobs since the end of the recession. Meanwhile, private-sector hiring has been far more consistent than conservatives would have you believe.

Unequal America: The Facts About Income Inequality And Economic Mobility 08-02-2012

The American economic pie may have increased in size, but 95 percent of Americans are getting a smaller slice than in the past. This is partly because the top 1 percent of the country has nearly quadrupled the size of its own helping. Their nearly 300 percent increase in take-home pay over that time dwarfs the more modest progress of the rest. Furthermore, while conservatives allege that progressives seek equal outcomes for all, at the cost of American economic freedom, the fact is our storied "equality of opportunity" is overstated. Economic mobility is scarce in the U.S. compared to other advanced economies, and most born into wealth or poverty stay more or less where they started.

Fact Check: Susan B. Anthony List's Radio Ad Supporting Ken Cuccinelli

Given that Susan B. Anthony List defended Todd Akin and Richard Mourdock after their extreme comments on pregnancy in cases of rape last year, it's no surprise they also support Ken Cuccinelli's extreme advocacy for unnecessary and burdensome regulations that could force many of the state's 23 abortion clinics to close.

Barriers To Reform: The Anti-Immigration Policies And Extremist Money Blocking Progress In The Senate

04-15-2013

As immigration reform moves forward in the Senate, the success of any legislation will depend on the cooperation of conservative lawmakers with troubling histories on the issue. However, it is not only their past policy positions and quotes that are disturbing. These key conservative senators also share a history of campaign contributors who also fund extremist anti-immigrant organizations, including those labeled as hate groups by the Southern Poverty Law Center.

Better Off: 2008 Vs. 2012

11-02-2012

Ahead of the 2012 election, the conservative movement has made a concerted effort to undersell the economic recovery. Ads run by conservative outside groups regularly remark on lost jobs and paint a dismal economic picture. Mitt Romney brushed aside a report that over 170,000 new jobs were created in October to proclaim that the economy "is at a virtual standstill." Yet there is widespread evidence against the idea that the economy has stalled or worsened during President Obama's tenure. Where headlines in 2008 and early 2009 proclaimed job losses, a crashing housing market, and a contracting economy, the news in late 2012 is hopeful: 171,000 jobs were added in October, the 32nd straight month of private-sector growth; home prices are up while foreclosures are down; the economy is once again expanding; and consumer confidence is at its highest level since February 2008.

Meet The Man Behind The Claim That Obama 'Gutted' Welfare Reform

09-13-2012

Following a July 2012 Health and Human Services memo offering states a chance to apply for waivers that would allow them more flexibility in complying with welfare's work requirements, conservatives began claiming that President Obama had 'gutted' the 1996 welfare reform law and waived all work requirements associated with receiving assistance. This is false. Currently, activities that fulfill work requirements are narrowly defined by changes made during the law's 2005 reauthorization, and the waivers would let states try out new approaches to moving welfare beneficiaries towards stable employment while maintaining the principle that recipients must be progressing towards work. Yet the allegation remains popular among conservatives, thanks largely to the efforts of the Heritage Foundation's in-house welfare expert, Robert Rector.

How The Affordable Care Act Makes Medicare Stronger

More than two years after the Affordable Care Act (ACA) was signed into law, the conservative crusade against the bill continues. Perhaps the most common attack against the law is that it hurts America's seniors, specifically by "cutting" or "slashing" $500 billion from Medicare. In reality, ACA's savings do not have a negative impact on

Offensive Statements About Rape. According to Politico, "Susan B. 'It's a tactic to [force pro-life lawmakers to] talk about this rather than the 98 percent of abortions because they know that they lose it,' Dannenfelser said. She said that SBA List is working on a new training program for candidates and lawmakers to 'make sure that in future elections, a candidate can never with a straight face say, 'I never thought about that or I got caught flat-footed.'" Defund (of taxpayer dollars) Planned Parenthood, a multi-billion dollars organization." [Cuccinelli.com, Archived 3/10/2009]

Cuccinelli Compared Anti-Abortion Movement To Slavery Abolitionism. According to the Associated Press, "Virginia Democrats pushed two deeply emotional hot buttons Tuesday in the state's gubernatorial race, slamming Republican Ken Cuccinelli for equating the nation's bloody reckoning over slavery with today's anti-abortion movement. Nearly eight months before election day the Democratic Party of Virginia released video from last June that shows Cuccinelli addressing a small gathering of religious conservatives meeting in Williamsburg. It continues the Democrats' strategy of portraying the socially conservative attorney general as too extreme for a swing state. 'Over time, the truth demonstrates its own rightness, and its own righteousness. Our experience as a country has demonstrated that on one issue after another. Start right at the beginning — slavery. Today, abortion,' Cuccinelli said in remarks recorded by a Democratic Party tracker at a Family Foundation event on June 14, 2012. 'History has shown us what the right position was, and those were issues that were attacked by people of faith aggressively to change the course of this country,' he said. 'We need to fight for the respect for life, not just for life but for respect for life. One leads to the other.'" [Associated Press, 3/19/2013]

SBA List Background Information

An extreme record on women's issues and support of extreme candidates

SBA List Aims To "Reduce And Ultimately End Abortion." According to its website, "The Susan B. Anthony List, and its connected Political Action Committee, the SBA List Candidate Fund, are dedicated to electing candidates and pursuing policies that will reduce and ultimately end abortion. To that end, the SBA List will emphasize the election, education, promotion, and mobilization of pro-life women."[SBA-List.org, accessed 4/19/13]

SBA List's Top Legislative Priorities Are "Defunding Planned Parenthood" And "Ending All Federal Funding Of Abortion." According to its website, "SBA List has two main legislative priorities: ending all federal funding of abortion and ending taxpayer funding to Planned Parenthood." The "Pro-Life Legislation" section of the website includes individual pages for "Defunding Planned Parenthood" and "H.R. 3 No Taxpayer Funding for Abortion Act." [SBA-List.org, accessed 4/18/13]

Marjorie Dannenfelser Is President Of SBA List - Supported Virginia's Mandatory Transvaginal Ultrasound Bill. When Chris Matthews questioned Dannenfelser about a bill in Virginia effectively requiring women to undergo transvaginal ultrasounds before obtaining an abortion, Dannenfelser stated, "Really, this is a matter of giving a woman more information that she needs to make a decision that`s fully informed. [...] The reason the majority of women in Virginia and across the country support this is that they believe in that vulnerable spot in a very difficult place, that more information is better. And making -- there are two decisions to make. One decision is a medical decision. One is about the very contentious, very difficult decision about what is actually happening in an abortion. And that ultrasound speaks to that. It`s science. It`s a scientific opinion backing up a medical reality. And a moral –" Dannenfelser was cut off before completing her sentence. [MSNBC, Hardball, 2/22/12]

SBA List Defended Todd Akin Following His "Legitimate Rape" Comments. According to the Washington Post, "Republican leadership has a not so-subtle-hint for Todd Akin: They would like the Missouri Senate candidate, who remarked that 'legitimate rape' rarely results in pregnancy, out of the race — and sooner rather than later. [...] Pro-life groups, however, have taken a decidedly different take. Both the Susan B. Anthony List and Family Research Council have stood by Akin. They don't see him as a politician who has made a career ending gaffe. In their view, he's a strong abortion right opponent who articulated a tenet of the pro-life movement: Abortion should be illegal in all situations, rape included. 'Todd Akin ... has a record of voting to protect human life,' said Susan B. Anthony List President Marjorie Dannenfelser, reaffirming her support in a statement. He 'has been an excellent partner in the fight for the unborn.'" [Washington Post, 8/21/12]

The President Of Susan B. Anthony List Said "She Couldn't Agree More" With Richard Mourdock's Statement That Pregnancy Resulting From Rape Was "A Gift From God." According to The Courier-Journal, "After setting off a political furor that drew in both presidential campaigns, Indiana Republican Senate candidate Richard Mourdock on Wednesday stood by his comments that pregnancy after rape is 'something that God intended.' [...] The Indiana Right to Life political action committee issued a statement supporting Mourdock. And the head of the Susan B. Anthony List, an anti-abortion group supporting women candidates, said she 'couldn't agree more' with Mourdock's comments." [The Courier-Journal, 10/25/12]

Summary

Given that Susan B. Anthony List defended Todd Akin and Richard Mourdock after their extreme comments on pregnancy in cases of rape last year, it's no surprise they also support Ken Cuccinelli's extreme advocacy for unnecessary and burdensome regulations that could force many of the state's 23 abortion clinics to close.

Fact Check

SBA List Radio Ad Attacks McCauliffe Over Abortion Clinic Regulations. According to Politico's "Morning Score," "The anti-abortion group Susan B. Anthony List is targeting Virginia Democratic gubernatorial candidate Terry McAuliffe in new radio ad out today—the first paid advertising so far on behalf of either candidate. In the ad, SBA List goes after McAuliffe for opposing the Virginia Board of Health's new regulations for abortion clinics—measures McAuliffe called an 'unnecessary move' on the part of the state and many pro-abortion rights activists opposed as an attempt to financially cripple abortion clinics. 'In the race for Governor...there's one candidate who has taken extreme positions far outside the mainstream....one candidate whose radical ideas are troubling to every woman in Virginia. It's Terry McAuliffe,' the ad says." [Politico, 4/23/13]

The real facts about the Virginia Board of Health's new regulations for abortion clinics

Cuccinelli Put "Significant Pressure" On The State Board Of Health To "Crackdown On Abortion Clinics" With New Building Codes. According to the Washington Examiner, "The state Board of Health vote on Friday follows two years of contentious debate that included significant pressure from Attorney General and Republican gubernatorial candidate Ken Cuccinelli, who favored a more aggressive crackdown on abortion clinics. Last year, Cuccinelli refused to certify an agreement between health officials to exempt existing clinics from the tougher rules, and he threatened not to represent the board in any legal challenges if it ignored his concerns. Health officials agreed to rewrite the rules so they applied to existing clinics, prompting Health Commissioner Dr. Karen Remley to resign in protest." [Washington Examiner, 4/11/13]

- The New "Burdensome" Building Codes, Such As Parking Lot Size And Hallways Width Mandates, May Force Clinics To Close. According to the Washington Examiner, "Virginia health officials are poised to approve strict new rules for abortion clinics Friday amid massive opposition from pro-choice groups and a governor's race with two candidates closely tied to the opposing sides. Under the new guidelines, clinics would be required to meet the same building codes as hospitals, including bigger parking lots, wider hallways and larger operating rooms. Opponents of the measure say the changes would be burdensome and costly and could force many of the state's 23 providers to close their doors." [Washington Examiner, 4/11/13]

It's Cuccinelli who has the extreme record on a woman's right to choose

Rep. Broun: Evolution, Embryology, Big Bang Theory Are "Lies Straight From The Pit Of Hell"

TRANSCRIPT

From Rep. Paul Broun's (R-GA) remarks at the Liberty Baptist Church Sportsman's Banquet on September 27, 2012, in Hartwell, Georgia:

BROUN: God's word is true. I've come to understand that. All that stuff I was taught about evolution and embryology and the Big Bang Theory, all that is lies straight from the pit of Hell. And it's lies to try to keep me and all the folks who were taught that from understanding that they need a savior. You see, there are a lot of scientific data that I've found out as a scientist that actually show that this is really a young Earth. I don't believe that the Earth's but about 9,000 years old. I believe it was created in six days as we know them. That's what the Bible says.

And what I've come to learn is that it's the manufacturer's handbook, is what I call it. It teaches us how to run our lives individually, how to run our families, how to run our churches. But it teaches us how to run all of public policy and everything in society. And that's the reason as your congressman I hold the Holy Bible as being the major directions to me of how I vote in Washington, D.C., and I'll continue to do that.

About

The Richard and Helen DeVos Foundation, with assets worth over $97 million as of the end of 2010, is a conservative Grand Rapids-based charitable organization. In addition to funding educational and artistic ventures in Michigan and around the country, the DeVos Foundation directs a significant portion of its grants to conservative outfits, especially ones focused on socially or religiously conservative causes.

At least $10 million each has gone to the Heritage Foundation and Young America's Foundation, both of which are important parts of the conservative institutional structure, with the former producing studies and papers to bolster a right-wing perspective on public policy and the latter working to spread conservative values among America's high school and college students. Over $5 million has been given to Focus on the Family, James Dobson's socially conservative venture that has long been at the forefront of anti-LGBT activism. Another couple of million dollars has been given out among several groups that oppose abortion rights, including notoriously deceptive crisis pregnancy centers.

The foundation's namesakes, Richard and Helen DeVos, derive their fortune from Amway, a direct selling company Richard co-founded in 1959. Tied for 205th on Forbes' list of billionaires, Richard is worth $5 billion, and the DeVos family owns the Orlando Magic. They also contribute generously to Republican candidates and campaigns from their personal funds, most notably pouring over $35 million into son Dick DeVos' unsuccessful 2006 quest to become Governor of Michigan. In 2012, Richard Devos donated $250,000 to help Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker win his recall election.

Richard and Helen DeVos Foundation

About

The Richard and Helen DeVos Foundation, with assets worth over $97 million as of the end of 2010, is a conservative Grand Rapids-based charitable organization. In addition to funding educational and artistic ventures in Michigan and around the country, the DeVos Foundation directs a significant portion of its grants to conservative outfits, especially ones focused on socially or religiously conservative causes.

At least $10 million each has gone to the Heritage Foundation and Young America's Foundation, both of which are important parts of the conservative institutional structure, with the former producing studies and papers to bolster a right-wing perspective on public policy and the latter working to spread conservative values among America's high school and college students. Over $5 million has been given to Focus on the Family, James Dobson's socially conservative venture that has long been at the forefront of anti-LGBT activism. Another couple of million dollars has been given out among several groups that oppose abortion rights, including notoriously deceptive crisis pregnancy centers.

The foundation's namesakes, Richard and Helen DeVos, derive their fortune from Amway, a direct selling company Richard co-founded in 1959. Tied for 205th on Forbes' list of billionaires, Richard is worth $5 billion, and the DeVos family owns the Orlando Magic. They also contribute generously to Republican candidates and campaigns from their personal funds, most notably pouring over $35 million into son Dick DeVos' unsuccessful 2006 quest to become Governor of Michigan. In 2012, Richard Devos donated $250,000 to help Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker win his recall election.

The contributions documented in Conservative Transparency are based on a review of publicly available filings with the Internal Revenue Service and Federal Election Commission, as well as state-level data from a variety of sources. Please contact us for more information.
