Center to Protect Patient Rights

About

Center to Protect Patient Rights (CPPR) is a secretive nonprofit with reported ties to the Koch brothers that quietly disbursed more than $50 million to influence the 2010 midterm elections. After its founding in 2009, the center maintained an unusually low profile – no website, no press efforts, and no public address besides a post office box in Arizona – allowing it to remain virtually invisible until campaign watchdogs stumbled across the donations in May 2012. According to IRS forms, CPPR contributed over $44 million to conservative advocacy groups in 2010, most of it benefitting active participants in the midterms, along with almost $11 million the previous year.

Although the origin of CPPR's funding remains undocumented, the organization is apparently connected to the Koch brothers, most notably through its president, Sean Noble. Since ending his tenure as chief of staff to Rep. John Shadegg (R-AZ), Noble has been affiliated with two political consulting firms. But he was repeatedly identified as a "Koch operative" in reporting from 2011-12 (before the existence of CPPR was uncovered), and he was a speaker at each of the Kochs' biannual donor summits in 2010.

That year, Noble also attended Karl Rove's so-called "Weaver Terrace" meetings, where he represented the Koch brothers as conservative groups strategized and coordinated their ad spending. In fact, the top six recipients of CPPR cash – American Future Fund (about $13 million), 60 Plus Association ($11.6 million), Americans for Limited Government ($5.6 million), Americans for Job Security ($4.8 million), Americans for Tax Reform ($4.2 million), and Americans for Prosperity ($4.1 million) – were all Weaver Terrace staples. Other groups benefitting from CPPR's largesse included the anti-abortion Susan B. Anthony List, Club For Growth, and American Energy Alliance.

In 2012, the Kochs have reportedly enlisted operative Marc Short to represent them at Weaver Terrace meetings and manage the disbursement of funds raised at their donor summits. It is unclear what this means for Noble and CPPR. Due to loose reporting deadlines for nonprofits like CPPR, a 501(c)(4) nonprofit, there is no publicly available information on its activities beyond 2010.

The contributions documented in Conservative Transparency are based on a review of publicly available filings with the Internal Revenue Service and Federal Election Commission, as well as state-level data from a variety of sources. Please contact us for more information.

About

As the most generous contributor, by far, to the super PAC supporting Newt Gingrich's presidential campaign, Sheldon Adelson emerged as a key figure in the 2012 Republican primary contest. By the time Mitt Romney wrapped up the nomination, Adelson and his wife had poured $15 million into the pro-Gingrich group, Winning Our Future. That massive sum, spent on a candidate who was always something of a long shot (despite a couple of short-lived surges in the polls), bewildered many political observers. However, it was barely a drop in the bucket for the 78-year-old Adelson, whose Las Vegas Sands casino empire has made him a billionaire many times over. According to Forbes, Adelson's estimated net worth was $20.5 billion as of September 2012.

After the primary, Adelson shifted his attention from defeating Mitt Romney to defeating President Obama and other Democratic candidates, contributing a total of nearly $53.7 million to super PACs in the 2012 cycle. $20 million of that went to the Romney-supporting Restore Our Future super PAC, and $1 million went to a super PAC backing Florida Senate hopeful Connie Mack. Adelson and his wife also gave $5 million to the Congressional Leadership Fund, a super PAC chaired by Minnesota Sen. Norm Coleman, $5 million to the YG Action Fund, and $1 million to the Ending Spending Action Fund, which ran anti-Obama ads.

The presidential race may have thrust him into the spotlight, but Adelson's substantial giving didn't come out of the blue. In 2007, Sheldon and Miriam Adelson started a foundation "to strengthen the State of Israel and the Jewish people," a mission reflected in sizable grants to a variety of Jewish charities and advocacy groups. Most significantly, the Adelsons have gifted $100 million to the Birthright Israel Foundation, which provides free educational trips to Israel for Jews between the ages of 18 and 26 years old. Adelson is also the owner of Israel Hayom, a "free daily newspaper [in Israel] known for its relentless drumbeat of support for Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and other right-wing politicians."

At home, Adelson's political giving reflects his hawkishness on foreign policy and, perhaps especially, his abhorrence of organized labor. Accordingly, the vast majority of his contributions have benefitted Republican candidates and committees, even though Adelson describes himself as a "social liberal." In 2008, Adelson was the "main funder" of an outside group called Freedom's Watch, which closed its doors about a month after the election. Notably, that organization's leadership included Carl Forti, a longtime Republican operative now connected to Restore Our Future and Karl Rove's American Crossroads.

The contributions documented in Conservative Transparency are based on a review of publicly available filings with the Internal Revenue Service and Federal Election Commission, as well as state-level data from a variety of sources. Please contact us for more information.

About

Texas businessman Harold Simmons, worth $7.1 billion as of September 2012, was in the "anyone but Obama" political camp ahead of the 2012 presidential election. "Any of these Republicans would make a better president than that socialist, Obama," he told the Wall Street Journal, calling the president "the most dangerous American alive" because of what he sees as Obama's desire to "eliminate free enterprise." In his quest to unseat Obama, Simmons donated to super PACs supporting Mitt Romney, Newt Gingrich, Rick Perry, and Rick Santorum.

Underlying his desire to oust the Democratic president is Simmons' singular objective: to elect candidates who will help out his businesses by pursuing a deregulatory agenda. Simmons built his fortune from scratch, starting out in the business world by purchasing drug stores one by one until he had amassed a chain of 100, which he sold to Eckerd in 1973. He multiplied his money by buying and selling companies. Today, the source of his wealth is his holding company, Contran, which owns stakes in a variety of other companies.

Contran's largest holding, Valhi, owns Waste Control Specialists (WCS), a hazardous materials disposal company that has come under scrutiny of late for its attempts, overseen by Simmons, to build and fill a nuclear waste dump site in West Texas. Simmons has used his money and the influence derived from it to get state laws regulating radioactive materials changed in Texas and to ensure that WCS received exclusive licenses for handling it. Concerns about the site's proximity to important aquifers – and potential contamination of the water table – have been essentially brushed under the rug. He's now paying lobbyists to work on changing federal rules in order to open up a chance for WCS' site to handle more types of waste, which would be immensely profitable.

According to publicly available records, Simmons, his wife, and his company have doled out over $43 million in political donations since the late 1970s, the majority of which (nearly $27 million) went to super PACs in the 2012 election cycle. Simmons' recent political donations total far more than in prior cycles, but that doesn't mean Simmons didn't try to contribute heavily before; he was fined by the FEC for exceeding limits in the 1988 cycle.

Simmons has financed some of the most outrageous negative campaigns against Democrats, including ads in 2008 linking Obama to the Weather Underground and the infamous Swift Boat ads hitting John Kerry in 2004. This time around, his most notable contribution was over $19 million to Simmons' favorite super PAC, American Crossroads. Simmons counts Karl Rove, who is linked to Crossroads, as a personal political adviser.

The contributions documented in Conservative Transparency are based on a review of publicly available filings with the Internal Revenue Service and Federal Election Commission, as well as state-level data from a variety of sources. Please contact us for more information.

About

A top individual political donors, Bob Perry is among of a handful of wealthy individuals who poured money into national Republican politics in the 2012 electy cycle. Hailing from Houston, Texas, Perry made his millions via a homebuilding company he started in 1968. In 2010, his wealth was estimated at over $600 million, and he's put over $80 million into politics in the last 10 years, over $21 million of which went just to super PACs in the 2012 cycle.

That cycle, Perry made his mark as a major contributor to Restore Our Future, a super PAC supporting Mitt Romney, to which he donated $10 million. He chipped in another $7.5 million to American Crossroads, which also received $7 million from Perry in 2010. When Texas Gov. Rick Perry (no relation) entered the presidential race, Perry and his wife donated the maximum $2,500 each to his campaign, along with $100,000 to the pro-Perry Make Us Great Again super PAC, before the governor flamed out in early 2012.

Perry (Bob) has long been a supporter of Perry (Rick), having given the politician over $2.5 million between 2001 and 2010. That makes him the governor's single biggest individual campaign donor. Moreover, Perry has made sizable donations to the Republican Governors Association, which is in turn the largest overall contributor to the governor.

Other Texan politicians also enjoy ample support from Perry, who has donated at least $6.7 million just to state-level politicians in the Lone Star State. He was a major supporter of George W. Bush's gubernatorial runs, and also supported Bush's two presidential bids. The reclusive donor achieved some notoriety during the 2004 election, when he became known as the largest backer of Swift Boat Veterans for Truth, donating $4.5 million to the effort to smear Democratic candidate John Kerry's military record.

Perry also keeps an eye on other states, and has a habit of throwing money into close races around the country. In 2006, for example, he donated $500,000 to a group supporting Tim Pawlenty's Minnesota gubernatorial campaign, the largest donation made to support Pawlenty. Ahead of Gov. Scott Walker's recall election, Perry donated $500,000.

Beyond his tendency to give to establishment conservatives, little is known about the specifics of Perry's personal views. Although he worked as campaign treasurer on William Clements' successful 1986 race for Texas governor – a campaign Karl Rove also worked on – he has avoided direct involvement with politics and politicians in latter years, preferring to make hands-off donations. One issue he has tipped his hand in favor of, however, is tort reform, an effort to limit the damages complainants can seek in civil suits or make it harder to file such suits. This, incidentally, is an issue that would benefit Perry's business, which has been in a legal battle for over 10 years with a couple seeking compensation for a defective house they bought from Perry's company.

The contributions documented in Conservative Transparency are based on a review of publicly available filings with the Internal Revenue Service and Federal Election Commission, as well as state-level data from a variety of sources. Please contact us for more information.

Koch Brothers

Origin of funds

Contributions associated with Koch Brothers may come from one of the following entities: Charles G. Koch Charitable Foundation, David H. Koch Charitable Foundation, Claude R. Lambe Charitable Foundation

About

Ultra-wealthy industrialists Charles and David Koch, known collectively as the Koch brothers, have worked to influence public opinion and policy by sticking their fingers in virtually every corner of the right-wing establishment. The Kochs have used their vast wealth to fund a variety of conservative think tanks, non-profits, and political candidates they hope will further their conservative-libertarian ideology, as well as the free-market policies that will benefit their company's bottom line.

Charles and David Koch are each worth an estimated $31 billion as of September 2012, and their family business, Koch Industries, pulls in around $100 billion per year from its operations in oil, chemicals, building materials, and a variety of other products. As CEO, Charles controls the company, and David – who once ran for vice president on the Libertarian Party's unsuccessful 1980 ticket – is its executive vice president. David has clarified that he now considers himself a Republican, rather than a libertarian, but breaks with the GOP on certain issues, as he supports gay marriage and has suggested that the government should consider cutting defense spending. Two more brothers (Freddie and William) were pushed out of the company in 1983, with William going on to found Oxbow, an energy and commodities company.

Koch Industries operates a political action committee, KochPAC, which has given over 80 percent of its $8-million-plus in political contributions to Republicans. In addition to making political contributions from their personal and professional coffers, the Koch family doles out its money through several foundations, the most prominent of which are the Charles G. Koch Charitable Foundation, the David H. Koch Charitable Foundation, and the Claude R. Lambe Charitable Foundation (the board of which consists of Koch family members and employees of other Koch organizations). In 2008 alone, according to the New Yorker's Jane Mayer, these three foundations donated to nearly three dozen political and policy organizations. The Koch family also controls two less politically inclined foundations: the Fred C. and Mary R. Koch Foundation and the Koch Cultural Trust.

But the Kochs haven't been content merely to fund others' ventures; the brothers have set up a number of political think tanks and non-profits of their own, into which they pour money from their foundations. Perhaps the most prominent of these is a non-profit called Americans for Prosperity (AFP), which was started by David Koch and is rumored to get much of its anonymous funding from the Kochs. Pushing for a low-tax, small-government agenda and closely associated with the Tea Party, AFP spends its money running thinly veiled issue ads targeting Democratic candidates, organizing protests against key Democratic priorities, and training Tea Party activists. It also hosts the "Defending the American Dream" summit. AFP is a 2004 spinoff of another now-defunct Koch-backed project called Citizens for a Sound Economy, a group that also spawned fellow Tea Party mobilizers FreedomWorks.

In 1977, Charles Koch co-founded the Cato Institute, a libertarian research and advocacy think tank, with Ed Crane, who served as president of Cato but agreed to step down following a dispute with the Kochs over control of the institution Another Koch-funded project, launched in the 1980s, is the Mercatus Center, a free-market think tank at the conservative George Mason University. According to a Wall Street Journal profile, Mercatus is "the most important think tank you've never heard of," and has had remarkable success in its effort to target regulations that impact business, including Environmental Protection Agency standards that affect businesses like Koch Industries. Charles Koch is a director of Mercatus' board, and Koch family foundations have donated over $30 million to George Mason, much of which has benefited Mercatus.

While it's impossible to trace all the money the Kochs have put into building and funding a conservative and libertarian establishment, they're known to have donated, either personally or through their foundations, to cornerstones like the Heritage Foundation, the Manhattan Institute, the Reason Foundation, and the American Enterprise Institute. Less well-known beneficiaries include the Institute for Justice, the Institute for Humane Studies, the Bill of Rights Institute, and the Foundation for Research on Economics and the Environment. Several of these, and a host of other organizations funded by the Koch family, are part of a massive effort to deny climate change and oppose any legislation to address it – legislation that could impact the earnings of the Kochs' company. According to Greenpeace, the Koch foundations have given over $55 million to climate opposition groups.

The contributions documented in Conservative Transparency are based on a review of publicly available filings with the Internal Revenue Service and Federal Election Commission, as well as state-level data from a variety of sources. Please contact us for more information.
