Mosques and Islamic Centers

Mosques and Islamic Centers

Check to see who holds the title to the local mosque. You can do this by going to the property division of the Assessor's office in your local county court house. Title holders to property are public record. Simply give them the address to the property, and they will supply you with the owner's name.

This process can often be done with a phone call to the county court house as well. If title is held by a Saudi business entity, the local authorities (police and FBI) need to know this fact. This connection highly increases the chances of jihadist materials being given out.

In addition to this, many local imams have direct ties to radical Islamism. Try to check into this at your local mosque. One of the best ways to safely monitor messages at the local mosque is to go online. They will often post their content on their websites.

Madrassas and Islamic Schools

Madrassas and Islamic Schools

The Saudis are building madrassas around the world at an alarming rate. If there is one in your area, this school needs to get your chapter's full attention. The chances of jihadist teaching and materials existing in a U.S. madrassa are startlingly high.

Try to talk with any non-Muslim faculty. Get a feel for what is being taught. See if you can obtain copies of their textbooks.

Check to see who owns the facility (see the title search process above in the Mosques section). Often, a school facility will be leased to them by the actual owner of the facility.
