I received your email. As I told you, there is nothing confidential about your communications to me and I can't treat them as such.

Mark,

I had hoped you would call me. This week I got a phone call from a deputy asking me how far I was going to take my public record disclosure I did on a former employee [redacted] This deputy is a friend of hers. I told him my intent was to find out as much as I could about John Urquhart since my intent is to sue him and that my intent is not to hurt this former deputy since I do not known her.

A day later another deputy who admitted to having an affair with her called me and asked me the same thing. He said his wife knew about it but he was afraid of media attention. I assured him I had not done disclosure on his e-mails because he was afraid there might have been exchanges via e-mail.

The Sheriff is alleged to have also had relations with this deputy when he was her sergeant which was my reason for the disclosure request.

I figured that the legal department had notified the former deputy of the request so I figured that was how she knew. I then e-mailed the legal manager and asked if they do notify former employees of public record disclosures. She told me that if there was sensitive information that they would notify a third party,

I e-mailed back and said I would make the question easier. I asked if she notified [redacted] of my request. The manager said she specifically handled the complaint and did not notify anyone of it.

In the meantime, another female detective who was friends with [redacted] got an e-mail blasting her and saying that the detective told me things about her and the Sheriff and her that only this detective would have known. The detective got a veiled threat saying something to the effect that Karma was coming and it would be quick and merciless.

I contacted the deputy that called me on the first day and asked him how he knew that I did public disclosure because the legal department didn't notify [redacted]. He stumbled and said "What if, for instance, just say the Sheriff heard I was going to lunch with Holland and told me that you did public disclosure and I told her?" He then admitted that the Sheriff told him what took place.

I called Sgt. Larson because quite frankly she is trustworthy. I asked her to get in touch with Karen Sutherland because Karen is e-mailing downtown everything I write and if this gets out I will surely be retaliated against.

So after I do the public disclosure request the Sheriff somehow learns of it and notifies another deputy he knows is having lunch with this woman and she in turn sends a veiled threat to another detective. I do not know how the second deputy learned of the disclosure request because it did not concern his record and according to the first deputy he did not tell him and he doesn't believe [redacted] speaks to him any more.

This morning I go to the end of my driveway to check my mail. I have two magazines on top and on the bottom I have an unsigned letter threatening me for digging things up. I took a photo of the letter. My house has cameras due to a past incident a few years ago but my driveway is 225 feet so the mailbox is out of range of the cameras.

Interestingly enough, after I do the public record disclosure I receive 3 A-150 forms from Lance King who is the "EEO OFFICER" for the department and supposed to be the person people go to when they feel retaliation. He was the person who sounded the alarm on me and called me litigious and then wanted to conduct the investigation himself! He then, in the middle of an investigation is sending me A-150 forms and I also believe he prepared a letter for Chief Deputy Pugel threatening my employment.

I cannot get Captain Anderson to answer a phone call or to take my concerns seriously. My intent in doing public disclosure was not to have people threatened nor to ruin their lives. My intent was to do it quietly and to find out what I needed to know so that when I do sue the Sheriff I know the man and his past.

I cannot believe that information from my EEO complaint is being shared with Lance King since he started the whole thing. It would seem like investigation 101 would be you don't share information during the investigation with the person who caused the retaliation to start.

I realize your job is the Civil Prosecutor but I seriously do not know where else to turn to. I have blown the whistle and the harder I blow the more retaliation there is.

Brian
