KiwiSaver advice

This guidance note is for advisers and financial firms advising on KiwiSaver products.

CONSULTATION DRAFT

It gives guidance on when advice is class advice, personalised advice or just information.

About FMA guidance

Our guidance:

- explains how we interpret the law
  - describes the principles underlying our approach
  - gives practical examples about how to meet obligations.

Guidance notes: provide guidance on a topic or topic theme. Issuing guidance is just one of the ways we can be transparent and share our intended approach with the market. Guidance notes are not binding, but they help market participants to be confident they understand our approach and how we interpret, and intend to apply, the law relating to their responsibilities.

Information sheets: provide concise guidance on a specific process or compliance issue or an overview of detailed guidance.

You might also like to check the reports and papers on our website. For example, our monitoring reports describe actual practice we are seeing and our comments on this.

Document history

KiwiSaver – our view on advice

Introduction

New Zealanders must prepare properly for their retirement. For many, KiwiSaver may represent a large part of their retirement savings and of their overall ultimate financial security. It may also be their first investment and will certainly, in terms of the total fees charged, be one of their most significant ongoing expenses. It is very important therefore that New Zealanders get the help they need to make good decisions about KiwiSaver and to consider how KiwiSaver fits with their overall investment and retirement planning. Getting good information and good advice improves their chances of achieving the retirement they want.

Replaces our earlier guidance

This guidance replaces our 2012 Guidance Note: Sale and Distribution of KiwiSaver. Our previous approach emphasised that personalised advice should be given only by those advisers who were eligible by law to give it. We have received feedback that that our approach resulted in some people not getting the help they needed, as firms saw it as risky to provide advice.

We are replacing our earlier guidance to try to change this situation, and to encourage advisers and financial firms to help people make good decisions about KiwiSaver.

We have reconsidered our approach to personalised and class advice. While we still consider that some situations require personalised advice, the law describes a clear role for class advice. We recognise that if our view of what can be delivered as class advice is too restrictive, the likely result is that firms will not feel comfortable enabling their staff to give class advice – in effect, any advice – and New Zealanders are less likely to get the help they need.

This guidance updates and clarifies our view of what the different types of advice are, so advisers can be more confident they are within the rules. We pay special attention to explaining class advice, because much of what customers want and need to know about KiwiSaver is class advice.

While it remains true that many would likely benefit from detailed personalised advice, the more pressing need is for them to have started getting the help they need to make informed decisions about KiwiSaver.

Changes coming

This guidance applies the current law, which distinguishes between class and personalised advice. Currently, financial advisers can give customers information only, or they can give ‘class’ or ‘personalised’ advice. Only some advisers can give personalised advice. This guidance discusses our view of what falls into each of these types of services.

However we note, that the Government has signalled significant changes to the Financial Advisers Act 2008, the legislation regulating financial advisers. The changes will affect the rules for advice on financial services and products, including KiwiSaver.

When the new legislation comes into effect, this guidance will be reviewed and possibly replaced. In the meantime, this guidance recognises there is an opportunity now to remove an identified barrier to New Zealanders getting the help they need to make good decisions about KiwiSaver.

What you should tell investors

Customers often want simple, focussed advice. They may not want to pay for advice and may not want to share their personal information. In those situations, there are four main pieces of information and advice that will be useful for every customer, whether they are considering joining KiwiSaver, switching between funds within one KiwiSaver scheme, or transferring between schemes. Each of the four can be explained without knowing a customer's financial situation and goals. These are:

Strongly encourage investors to consider these four factors

- Be in – be a KiwiSaver member (although be aware KiwiSaver is not affordable for some New Zealanders).
- Contribute – choose a contribution rate (at the very least, enough to get all the member tax credit).
- Right fund – identify the right type of fund.
- Tax – tell the scheme the correct prescribed investor rate (the tax rate that applies to their KiwiSaver investment).

Types of advice

Information only is not advice

Advice involves a recommendation or opinion about a financial product. Providing information only is not advice.

Class advice

Class advice is a recommendation or opinion based on class characteristics (such as gender, age and risk profile).

A lot of advice about KiwiSaver that people want and need will be class advice.

Personalised advice

Personalised advice is a recommendation or opinion that takes into account a person's financial situation and goals (for example, their outgoing expenses, and plans to leave money for their children). A rule of thumb is that you have moved from class to personalised advice when you cannot answer a customer's question without knowing about their personal financial situation and goals (for example 'how much can I afford to contribute to KiwiSaver?').

Who can provide which type of advice

You can see which type of adviser can provide the different types of advice about KiwiSaver in this table.

	Authorised Financial Advisers (AFA)  Individuals who are registered and authorised by the FMA	Qualifying Financial Entity (QFE) advisers  Representatives of entities approved by the FMA as Qualifying Financial Entities	Registered Financial Advisers (RFA)  Individuals registered to provide financial advice	Registered financial adviser entities  Entities registered to provide financial advice
Class advice	✓	✓	✓	✓
Personalised advice	✓	✓ about KiwiSaver products issued by the QFE or a member of the QFE group	✗	✗

Information that is not advice

If you give someone information about KiwiSaver, with no opinion or recommendation about a particular KiwiSaver product, it is not advice, and is not subject to the rules in the Financial Advisers Act.

Examples of what is not advice

Giving a customer the following types of information is not advice.

Topic	Question
What is KiwiSaver?	<ul style="list-style-type: none"><li>• General explanation about KiwiSaver: lock in, set levels of contributions, first home and hardship withdrawals, understanding the long-term financial impact, maximising KiwiSaver across their family, and understanding risk and volatility</li><li>• How does it work?</li><li>• How do I join?</li><li>• Where does my money go?</li><li>• What are the different types of funds?</li><li>• How do I transfer?</li><li>• When can I get my money out?</li><li>• Can I lose my money if I make a mistake?</li><li>• How does joining a/this KiwiSaver scheme affect my existing superannuation?</li><li>• Is it a good idea for me to join KiwiSaver?<sup>1</sup></li></ul>
What are the features of this KiwiSaver scheme?	<ul style="list-style-type: none"><li>• How has the scheme performed?</li><li>• What fees are involved?</li><li>• What service do I get?</li><li>• How will the scheme communicate with me?</li><li>• Providing disclosure documents.</li><li>• If I want to get financial advice, does the scheme have someone I can talk to? Do I have to pay for that advice?</li></ul>
What do I have to do?	<ul style="list-style-type: none"><li>• What forms do I fill out?</li><li>• Do I tell my employer or do you?</li></ul>

<sup>1</sup> This is an exception. The definition of advice says giving an opinion or making a recommendation about a class of financial product – like KiwiSaver – is not advice. It's not advice, therefore, to give an opinion or recommendation that investing in KiwiSaver is a good financial decision.

Class advice

What is it and what's included?

Class advice is making a recommendation or giving an opinion relevant to a class of people. Class advice deals with 'most people' who have certain characteristics. Therefore, you can take a person's characteristics into account and still be providing class advice and not personalised advice.

An adviser can ask questions to establish what class a person is (for example their age; whether they have bought their first house; whether they are comfortable with taking some risk and so on) and use this information to give advice on KiwiSaver, and this advice will be class advice.

Personalised advice includes the situation when a customer would, in the circumstances in which the service is provided, reasonably expect the financial adviser to take into account their particular financial situation or goals. Firms have told us their concern that as they cannot control customer perceptions, they cannot be certain whether class advice has moved into being personalised advice. Similarly, advisers have told us that they are particularly concerned when customers volunteer information about their personal financial situation and goals.

There are some simple steps you can take to manage customer expectations when you are giving class advice, and want to help your customers to understand that this is what you are doing. Please note that we understand discussions can develop differently. In some situations it will be more effective for you to explain class advice at the start of the discussion. In some cases it will not be clear what class of advice will meet the customer's needs until the discussion has been going for a while, and explaining class advice is better done at that point. In either case:

- Explain to your customers that class advice is useful for people who are generally within the particular class you have identified, (based on your conversation with them), as being relevant to them. They may wish to consider whether that is a fair assessment.
- If, instead, they think there are other factors about their financial situation and goals that should be taken into account, tell them they may wish to receive personalised advice.
- Explain you are not able to provide personalised advice, and that the advice you will be giving them, if the conversation proceeds, is class advice.
- Say that if they would like personalised advice you can refer them to an adviser who can give that advice<sup>2</sup>.

If, after hearing and understanding these points, the customer confirms that they are happy to proceed on a 'class' basis, you can carry on and provide class advice not based on the customer's personal situation and goals.

Using digital tools

People are increasingly using digital tools to get information about KiwiSaver. Sometimes information obtained this way is called 'robo advice'.

Under current law, personalised advice must be given by a natural person. Only information and class advice can be given by digital tools. Proposed legislation will enable people to get personalised advice through technology.

If your digital tools ask good questions to get people to think about the 'four main steps' on page 5, you will be providing your customers with the important information they need. You will also have the assurance the advice is not shaped by a person's financial situation and goals as your digital tools can limit questions to getting information about a class of people.

<sup>2</sup> Meaning, as in the table on page 6: an authorised financial adviser (AFA), or a QFE adviser (about the products issued by the QFE/a member of the QFE group). Note that these types of adviser can also provide class advice.

Examples of class advice

You can give useful advice on the topics listed below without needing to rely on personal information about the person's financial situation and goals. In cases where a customer is asking about switching funds or transferring providers, we believe it is important for you to prompt them to think about the pros and cons of those decisions.

Topic	Examples of class advice
Why this KiwiSaver scheme?	<ul style="list-style-type: none"><li>• Advising whether the returns and fees of your scheme are lower or higher than that of other schemes</li><li>• Describing the benefits of your KiwiSaver scheme</li></ul>
Choosing a type of fund	<ul style="list-style-type: none"><li>• Recommending a particular fund for people of a certain age</li><li>• Recommending a particular fund for people who want to use their KiwiSaver funds to buy a house</li></ul>
Switching KiwiSaver funds	<ul style="list-style-type: none"><li>• Recommending a particular fund for people of a certain age</li><li>• Recommending a particular fund based on risk appetite</li></ul>
Transferring KiwiSaver providers	<ul style="list-style-type: none"><li>• Recommending that a customer consider the pros and cons of their existing scheme compared to your scheme (and helping them to find a tool which assists them to compare schemes before deciding to transfer)*</li><li>• Advising whether the returns and fees of your scheme are lower or higher than that of other schemes</li><li>• Describing the benefits of your KiwiSaver scheme</li></ul>

*NOTE FOR READERS: We believe it is important to recommend that customers consider the pros and cons of transferring from their existing scheme to another scheme. Post consultation, as part of finalising this guidance, we will reflect this by revising existing guidance on product replacement advice; and updating existing information for consumers on our website about transferring to a new provider.*

Sorted.org.nz's KiwiSaver Fund Finder tool is a useful resource to help answer questions about transferring between KiwiSaver providers.

Example 1 of class advice

Marama comes into a wealth management firm to ask about life insurance and talks to Sue, a QFE adviser.

During the discussion, Sue notes that Marama is not in KiwiSaver. Once the discussion about life insurance has concluded, Sue asks Marama if she is interested in finding out more about KiwiSaver. Sue explains that she can provide information and general advice about KiwiSaver. Sue further explains that she won't be able to give Marama advice about KiwiSaver which is based on her financial situation and goals but if Marama would like such advice, Sue can arrange for her to speak to an adviser at the firm who can do that*. Marama says she is happy to proceed with Sue.

Marama says she doesn't know much about KiwiSaver. Sue says there are lots of benefits, including the government contribution and the employer contribution that make KiwiSaver worthwhile. Sue provides information about the firm's KiwiSaver scheme and takes Marama through the product disclosure statement.

Marama decides to join the firm's KiwiSaver scheme and completes the investor profile. Marama asks whether she should be in a growth fund, as she is considering buying a house in the next three to four years. Sue suggests a more conservative fund is appropriate for people wanting to buy a house in the near future, as returns are less likely to go down significantly in a three to four year period.

Our approach

Sue has provided class advice because the recommendation is based on Marama's circumstances that belong to a class. Although this includes taking into account Marama's plan to buy a house, Sue has advised Marama based on class considerations, and not on Marama's financial situation and goals such as evaluating how much Marama should contribute when Marama's income and debt are taken into account.

*Although Sue is a QFE adviser, her wealth management firm has decided that she shouldn't give personalised advice on KiwiSaver products.

Example 2 of class advice

Ben is an AFA who works for X Bank. John (age 35) is a customer of X Bank, where he has his current and savings accounts and insurance. Four years ago, John was enrolled in X Bank's KiwiSaver scheme. He defaulted into the conservative fund in the scheme because he did not make an active fund selection at that time.

He goes into an X Bank branch and Ben is available to talk to him. John says that he would like a bit more help choosing a fund that's right for him. In particular, he wants to understand more about the risks of investing and about getting a fund that matches how much risk he's prepared to take. Ben explains clearly (following the approach discussed on page 8 of this note) that he is providing class advice. Ben then asks John a series of questions to identify his risk profile. The results of the risk assessment questionnaire indicate that John has a moderate risk profile.

Ben then calculates an example showing if a person leaves $15,000 in a conservative fund and contributes the minimum 3% until age 65 that could result in a balance on retirement of $280,000 in today's dollars. But if they invest in a balanced fund, the balance on retirement could be $350,000*.

After explaining these calculations, and the underlying assumptions, Ben then gives John information about the balanced fund. Ben explains that such a fund has been designed for investors who are willing to accept a medium level of fluctuations in investment returns, with the potential for a medium level of capital growth over the long term. Ben tells John other investors who have the same investment profile tend to invest in a balanced fund.

Our approach

Like most calculators, including those on www.sorted.org, the one Ben used took John's income into account to produce the retirement balance estimates. Nevertheless, in this situation, Ben has provided class advice, because his recommendation was based on class characteristics, not on John's financial situation and goals.

*assuming an annual salary of $110,000 and investment returns, post fees and tax, of about 4.5% p.a. for the conservative fund and about 6% p.a. for the balanced fund

Personalised advice

What is it and what's included

Personalised advice is given when the adviser takes into account the customer's financial situation or goals (or the customer would reasonably have expected the adviser to take these into account). Their financial situation is mostly about their income and debt. So, you will ask questions about the sources and level of their income, their savings, whether they have a mortgage, credit card and other debt, and the terms of that debt. When talking about KiwiSaver, the customers' financial goals are how much income they would like to live on in retirement, and for how long.

We have received feedback that our earlier guidance caused concern that if a customer provides any type of personal information, any advice given would not be class advice. However, our view is that advice is only personalised when it takes into account a person's financial situation and goals.

Personalised advice will usually involve meeting a customer and, having understood their financial circumstances and goals, identifying their investment needs and providing advice and products appropriate to those needs. Typically, it will involve discussing and potentially recommending several investment possibilities, not just KiwiSaver.

However, personalised advice can be about a single financial product, or a range of products.

The following advice will be personalised advice:

Examples of personalised advice

- Advice about how much a customer should contribute, based on that customer's income and level of debt
- Following a discussion about a customer's circumstances and goals, and some good KiwiSaver savings targets, the target that you think is best for the customer
- The proportion of savings a customer should put aside for their children's education, and the proportion that customer should put into their KiwiSaver fund
- Advice about the level of contributions a customer should make where that customer's partner is not in good health and whether that customer should get health insurance and pay less to KiwiSaver
- Advice about whether a customer should take advantage of the first-home withdrawal facility now, or whether that customer should wait until they have paid off their car and their job is secure
- Advice as to whether the KiwiSaver fund that has been recommended is enough to meet the customer's goals or whether the customer should also be investing in something else

What is the difference between class and personalised advice?

An answer to some questions might be class or personalised advice, depending on whether the adviser simply slots the person into a class, or takes into account the customer's financial situation and goals. Understanding a person's financial situation and goals generally takes more time and thought than giving class advice about KiwiSaver. The following factors may help you decide whether advice is class or personalised.

Factors to help you decide

The customer's expectation

Is the customer expecting advice on the best investments for them, based on their financial situation and goals? Or do they just want general advice about KiwiSaver? If they just want general advice about KiwiSaver, you should explain clearly (using the approach described on page 8 of this note) that you are providing class advice.

The nature of the interaction and the context

- Was it a long discussion?
- Has the customer booked a time with an adviser? If so, have they booked an appointment time long enough to go over all of their financial situation and goals? Or, have they booked a short time, or dropped in off the street?

The nature of the information

- Does the discussion require the customer to provide a lot of information?
- Does the discussion require the adviser to understand the customer's financial circumstances (that is, sources and amount of income and levels of debt, and goals such as how much the person wants to have each week to live on when they retire)?
- How detailed is the adviser's analysis?

Example of personalised advice

Philip is an AFA who works for a financial planning firm. Fran (age 58) has been thinking about the need to do some in-depth planning for her impending retirement. Fran has been in KiwiSaver since inception and has a balance of $200,000 in a growth fund. She also has a couple of rental properties and a number of direct share investments.

Fran has a general sense that she is reasonably well prepared for her retirement but wants to make sure, particularly since she would quite like to leave something behind for her grandchildren's education if she can. Fran is particularly interested in talking about whether she should stop contributing to KiwiSaver and put her discretionary income in to something else. Or, whether she should keep her contributions where they are but switch some or all of her KiwiSaver to a conservative fund to ensure that she doesn't lose a big piece of her nest egg if markets perform poorly in the next few years.

Fran has made an appointment to see Philip and brings along a risk profile which she completed through his financial planning firm's website. She discusses the results with Philip and outlines for him her goals and situation. Philip tells her that he can definitely help, and asks her for a lot of information about her debt, her income and expenses, what sort of life she wants in retirement, and exactly how much she wants to leave to her children and when.

Philip says that Fran will need to supply him with further details, but that she should probably re-allocate her investments toward income rather than growth, with the effect of reducing her exposure to equities and to direct property. Philip says that Fran should come back and see him in three weeks, when he will have an asset allocation, draw-down schedule and investment recommendations for her to consider.

Our approach

Philip is providing personalised advice. It would have become obvious very quickly that Fran's needs could not be met just by understanding class characteristics. Plus, while a decision about KiwiSaver was an important part of the discussion and decisions to be made, it was not the only decision to be made.

Good conduct

Good conduct is vital to fair, efficient and transparent markets, and ensures businesses, investors and consumer can participate confidently.

Financial advisers must exercise care, diligence and skill, and not be engaged in misleading or deceptive conduct. AFAs must comply with the Code of Professional Conduct for AFAs. Advisers must also disclose certain information to customers. It is important to give fair, transparent and relevant information. For more on disclosure obligations, see our website.

Overall, we are most interested in how firms and financial advisers demonstrate how they satisfy themselves that they have consistently delivered good outcomes to their customers.

Offering incentives to customers

Some KiwiSaver providers and advisers offer incentives. Incentives differ in the value they represent to customers, and the outcome they seek to achieve. Overall, our view is that advisers and KiwiSaver schemes can offer incentives, provided they do not distract the customer from making good decisions about KiwiSaver. We have already been speaking to providers about this, and will continue to do so.

Incentives can achieve good outcomes for customers when they encourage customers to get the best out of KiwiSaver. Examples include incentives offered to existing customers to provide a prescribed investor rate, or an email address (so they can receive information about their investment), or to engage in a decision about whether to move from a default fund.

We may be concerned where there is a combination of a high-value incentive and an effort to influence a customer to make a significant decision about KiwiSaver (such as a decision to transfer to another KiwiSaver provider). Our concern would centre on whether the value of the incentive was such that the customer was focussed on that, rather than making a good decision about KiwiSaver. For example, we would be concerned if providers were offering significantly reduced mortgage lending rates to new customers, on the condition that the customer also transfers their KiwiSaver account to the new provider. We may also be concerned where the incentive has features that might further distract a customer from making a good decision about KiwiSaver (for example where there was a time limit to accept the incentive offered).

If we believe that an incentive offered by a provider may distract a customer from making a good decision about KiwiSaver, we will look more closely at what the provider is offering, and how and why it's offered (including internal sales incentives).

In such circumstances the provider will need to show us how their advice and sales practices have been developed to ensure that customers are encouraged to make decisions based on the best KiwiSaver outcomes for them. The provider will also need to be able to satisfy us the offer is in the customer's interest. If the provider is unable to satisfy us of this, we will consider all appropriate actions open to us.

For more on good conduct, see A guide to the FMA's view of conduct.
