15 Jawbone’s Trade Secrets

16 10. Jawbone’s internal computer systems and cloud storage applications used secure, 17 password-protected repositories to store its documents, with access available to employees in the course
18 of their job responsibilities as authenticated by a Windows login. These secure Jawbone repositories 19 contained trade secrets, as defined in Title 18, United States Code, Section 1839(3), including the 20 following:

21 a. Audio Now Study (“Trade Secret A”): Jawbone’s proprietary and confidential qualitative 22 survey conducted of users of small-form speaker products, describing the results of inquiries
23 into timing and location of small speakers, threshold of convenience for use of an external 24 speaker versus an internal device speaker, and other factors affecting a user’s decision to 25 purchase a speaker. The study, which had been professionally designed, implemented, and 26 summarized at considerable expense, was part of Jawbone’s overall concentration on and 27 investment in research and development, and contained substantial proprietary and confidential
28 information, including but not limited to a roadmap for future steps and product development

1 based on the research conclusions. Only authorized team members had access to the study, and 2 limitations were placed on the use and copying of the study.

3 b. Chinese User Market Study (“Trade Secret B”): Jawbone’s proprietary and confidential
4 multi-faceted study of Chinese consumers, providing highly specific information about users’
5 motivations, influences, desired features, brand preferences, reasons for purchasing fitness
6 trackers, and shopping methodologies. The 53-page document is marked with a legend 7 specifying it to be “proprietary and confidential,” and contains a significant volume of 8 information, both quantitative and qualitative, about users in one of the world’s most important
9 consumer markets. Only authorized team members had access to the study, and limitations 10 were placed on the use and copying of the study.

11 c. Vendor And Pricing Information For International Suppliers (“Trade Secret C”): Lists
12 and schedules of Jawbone’s vendors who have been determined to be, through trial and error,
13 capable of providing reliable services and products, including but not limited to printed circuit
14 board fabrication, labor, materials, components, and other services involving specialized skills 15 or equipment, and corresponding pricing information. Further, Jawbone had, over the course of 16 many years, negotiated extensively to obtain competitive price quotes from these vendors for 17 the delivery of specialized and unique prototypes of new products in development.

18 d. Schematics, Design Specifications, And Detailed Description Of Unreleased Fitness
19 Headphone (“Trade Secret D”): As part of its research and development of a project code 20 named “Heisenberg,” emails, drawings, and other files detailing the specific combination of 21 sensors to be integrated into Jawbone’s unreleased fitness headphones product, including 22 gyroscopes, accelerometers, magnetometers, an optical heart-rate monitor, and microphones on 23 each ear piece. Such data was highly proprietary, represented a multi-million dollar investment 24 into research and design, and was a critical part of Jawbone’s historical strategic advantage in 25 headphones and speakers over its competitors, particularly Fitbit, which in 2015 did not have 26 any headphone or audio products for sale to consumers.

27 e. Emails, Presentations, And Design Documents Related To Heisenberg Headphones
28 (“Trade Secret E”): Documents containing the specific features Jawbone intended to include

1 in its unreleased fitness Heisenberg Headphone product, including its audio features, advanced 2 tracking features, and lifestyle coaching.

- 3 f. Three-Dimensional Drawing Of HRM And Driver Locations And Heisenberg Sensor
4 Boards Schematics (“Trade Secret F”): Drawings containing the layout and design of 5 components and circuits to be included in the unreleased Heisenberg headphones in order to 6 optimize functionality, stability, and battery life.
- 7 g. Internal Email And Attachment Regarding Heisenberg CAD (“Trade Secret G”): A 8 Computer-aided Design (“CAD”) file containing the settings, technical specifications, and 9 features for the heart rate monitor to be included in the unreleased Heisenberg headphones, 10 which provided the ability to adjust sampling frequency and intensity of the optical monitor to 11 determine heart rate accurately while minimizing the extent of power consumption.
- 12 h. Jawbone NPI COGS Refresh And Supporting Spreadsheet With Unit Profit And Loss
13 Forecast (“Trade Secret H”): Jawbone’s detailed financial data specifying product costs, 14 margins, and action plans for multiple Jawbone products sold in interstate and foreign 15 commerce.
- 16 i. Spitz Parts, Material, Process, Site/Vendor, Cosmetic, Volume, And Pricing Spreadsheet
17 (“Trade Secret I”): Data, photos, and analyses specifically reflecting Jawbone’s costs, 18 including its cost of goods sold and its liabilities to manufacturers, suppliers, or vendors for the 19 “Spitz” waterproof version of Jawbone’s wearable fitness tracker.
- 20 j. Daily Diary Study (“Trade Secret J”): A journal-based qualitative study with 18 participants 21 who used both Jawbone’s UP24 electronic fitness tracker and Fitbit wristbands, seeking to 22 understand how users interact with wearable devices, assessing users’ needs, goals, and 23 perceptions. This comprehensive study of user preferences, particularly in the comparison 24 between Jawbone and Fitbit products, was a “Foundational” document for Jawbone.
- 25 k. User Segmentation Study (“Trade Secret K”): A quantitative study of over 1400 Jawbone 26 users inquiring into users’ backgrounds, reasons for purchasing fitness trackers, interest in 27 health and fitness, and motivation. Containing the legend “Proprietary and Confidential,” this 28 study was the starting point of subsequent efforts by Jawbone to define user personas and archetypes to better understand market segmentation to develop and produce for sale more specific, targeted products beyond basic unitary features. Information contained in this 73-page document served as the basis for much of Jawbone's product roadmap, and had significant economic value to Jawbone.

- l. Lifestyle Tracker Shopper Journey Study (“Trade Secret L”): A quantitative study of fitness tracker owners, inquiring into users’ desired features, shopping research, familiarity with various brands and products, motivation to use a tracker device. This document contained information on user comparisons between Jawbone and Fitbit.
 - m. International Tracker Market Study (“Trade Secret M”): A quantitative study of over 1500 European Jawbone users inquiring into users’ expectations, desired features, reasons for purchasing fitness trackers, and shopping methodology.
 - n. Headphones Owner Survey and Workout Headphones Survey (“Trade Secret N”): Quantitative surveys of headphone owners’ demanded features, price sensitivities, and specific factors affecting consumers’ use of headphones during exercise.
