Rock ‘n’ Roll Due to Last Five Years

Nat’s Survey Shows Parents’ Hopes Dashed

Say Nat and Dad, maybe you’d better get those antikley-type ear plugs after all. This rock ‘n’ roll racket is going to be around quite a while.

Nat’s recent survey of 17,000 boys and girls shows that rock ‘n’ roll has never been more popular. Nearly 100 per cent of the kids say they listen to it.

At that time, only 10 per cent of the boys and girls in the survey thought ever heard rock ‘n’ roll “in a steady diet.” Now, nearly 100 per cent of the kids say they listen to it.

Instead of dying out, rock ‘n’ roll is gaining more momentum in schools and at home. The survey of 17,000 kids shows that rock ‘n’ roll is here to stay.

The survey also found that many parents are discovering rock ‘n’ roll for the first time. Nearly 50 per cent of the parents said they had never heard of rock ‘n’ roll before.

The report states that rock ‘n’ roll is here to stay and will continue to be popular for at least five years.

Some cuts on the beat.

Youngsters in Burlington Area Like Rock ‘n’ Roll But Not ‘Wild’ for It

Rock ‘n’ roll music is fine, Burlington teenagers interviewed said, but rock ‘n’ roll music is not too wild. They said they prefer more mild music like jazz and folk.

Several noted that rock ‘n’ roll is given too much credit for the beat, but others thought that it would result in popularity for a time.

As for the lyrics, all of the teenagers said they did not particularly care for them and seldom listened to them. Most of the young people thought that they were suggestive or should be removed from the songs.

John Arnold, 17, of 12 Lodge Rd., says, “I like rock ‘n’ roll because it has a beat and more rhythm than most music. It’s my favorite kind of music.”

I think most of the lyrics are just right.

William Kavos, 17, of 224 Cran- cren Rd., says rock ‘n’ roll is a certain extent, but I think they can go too far. Oh, no. I think it’s my favorite kind of music. I like the lyrics better.

I think rock ‘n’ roll has been around too long for quite a while. I don’t think there’s much left from the songbooks.

I believe you can even understand the lyrics. Not in more words, but in a whole. Most people don’t listen to them anyway. They don’t just go with the beat most of the time.

Warren Hart, 18, of 41 S. Willard Rd., says rock ‘n’ roll is fine for listening and for the rhythm. As far as singing along and listening to it as an evening, I would much rather go to Broadway shows.

It’s not going to stay around too long. It has one of those fads that comes and goes. If it stays, it will be mainly for dancing.

I don’t think there’s much left in the lyrics and I don’t care for them at all.

Douglas Wilson, 18, of 15 Alfred Rd., says: “I like certain kinds of music, but I don’t like rock ‘n’ roll. I think it’s a little too wild.”

The lyrics are definitely not my favorite kind of music. I like to have some from Broadway shows.

In popularity, I think rock ‘n’ roll will go in popularity and stay in the world.

The lyrics are different to some, but they’re fine. I think that the kids who are used to them will keep them.

Dave Arnold, 17, of 12 Lodge Rd., says: “I don’t think rock ‘n’ roll is the music in general and don’t really have a favorite kind. But I like some ballads. I think rock ‘n’ roll will probably be around for a while.”

In addition, only Pontiac offers the instant, jeweled-action response of Tempest 305 performance... plus New Direction styling! So why buy a car with...