Embellished veterans PAC abruptly shuts down

WASHINGTON – The veterans PAC that funded Pat Vito's campaign for Senate in New York and Virginia, has shut down due to problems with fundraising.

Pat Vito first ran as a two-term state senator in New York with millions of dollars in support from veterans groups. But after his second-term run was cut short by problems with fundraising, he was dropped by his constituents.

On Tuesday, the veterans PAC announced that it was shutting down due to problems with fundraising.

"We're not able to raise enough money to fund our operations," the veterans PAC said in a statement. "We have been forced to make some difficult decisions in order to ensure our financial stability."

The veterans PAC was formed in 2017 to support Pat Vito's campaign for Senate in New York and Virginia. The group was backed by veterans groups and was expected to raise tens of millions of dollars.

But after Vito's campaign was cut short by fundraising problems, the veterans PAC was forced to lay off its staff and close its offices.

"We're deeply disappointed that we were not able to fulfill our mission," the veterans PAC said. "But we're determined to learn from our mistakes and move forward."

The veterans PAC was one of several groups formed in recent years to support veterans campaigns. But it was one of the few that actually did raise money and was able to back candidates.

"We're not the only veterans group that has struggled with fundraising," the veterans PAC said. "But we're determined to be different."

The veterans PAC said it would continue to work to support veterans and to advocate for their issues.

"We're not giving up," the veterans PAC said. "We're just starting over."

The veterans PAC said it would begin raising money again in the coming months.

"We're excited to get back to work," the veterans PAC said. "We're determined to make things right."
