You may remember this artist for his 18-karat-gold toilet titled "America." The $6-million throne was stolen from England's Blenheim Palace over the summer.

The banana sold for $120,000 at Miami's Art Basel this week.

Emmanuel Perrotin, the gallery founder, told CBS News that Maurizio's work is not just about objects, but about how objects move through the world.

"Whether affixed to the wall of an art fair booth or displayed on the cover of the New York Post, his work forces us to question how value is placed on material goods," he said.

Art lover Weezie Chandler said, "You can do anything and once you're established you can get away with it."

One art lover said, "It's mocking the art world. That's what Maurizio Cattelan does."

Some art connoisseurs believe the piece represents the art world and its wealth inequalities.

Others will tell you to not think that deep.

Our opinions are spilt.

A photograph showing two women from behind, both holding smartphones to take pictures of a banana sculpture. The sculpture is suspended by a strap from a metal hook on a white wall. The woman on the left has long, wavy brown hair and is wearing a light-colored, patterned top. The woman on the right has blonde hair styled in a bun and is wearing a yellow dress with a large green and black leaf print. She is also wearing a headband with a large circular brooch. A small white card is visible near the banana sculpture.
